CARD!

To the Electors of the County of Kent,

GENTLEMEN:—As it will soon be your duty to choose a representative in the House of Assembly to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of the Hon. O. J. LeBlanc, I, at the solicitation of a large number of the electorate, present myself as a candidate for your suffrages.

As every man who seeks to represent the people should know what ground he himself stands on, so as to merit their approval, I briefly lay down the planks on which I ask you to endorse my candidature.

If elected, I will support the present government: Because it has reduced the controllable expenditure; given the country economical and honest administration; fairly maintained our roads and bridges; done justice to our lumber industry by a considerable reduction of the stumpage; favored colonization—the first and greatest interest of our people; encouraged the farming industry by their large expenditure for the improvement of stock; and in this land of mixed classes and nationalities shown a disposition to deal fairly with all.

As a plain man—one of the common people—I claim to know what the needs of the people are, and, as your interests are mine, I will honestly and zealously seek to advance them. I will do all I can to lighten the burden of the new settlers, and make a special point of extending the facilities for colonization and settlement. To our roads and bridges I will give my best attention, and to our schools, particularly in poor districts, the encouragement such an important matter as education rightly deserves.

I will, at meetings to be called throughout the county, more fully explain my views to you, and ask you to approve of them by honoring me with your votes.

I am, gentlemen,
Your obedient servant,
AUGUSTE LEGER.

St. Louis, Kent Co., August 18th, 1891.

Election Card!

To the Electors of the County of Kent,

GENTLEMEN:—

O. J. LeBlanc, M. P. P., having accepted a nomination for the late election for the Commons, his seat in the House of Assembly has thereby become vacant and you will soon be again called upon to elect a member to represent you at Fredericton.

The large vote (1203) which I received at the election in January, 1890, (when I was comparatively unknown in some sections of the County) with the solicitations and encouragements I have lately had from a very large number of you, induce me to again offer you my services. I have since that election continued to represent my own parish (St. Marys) at the Municipal Board, and have been honoured with an unanimous election as Warden of the Council, I have therefore become more intimately acquainted with the business and people of the County, and have confidence that I can faithfully serve your interests in the higher position to which I aspire.

If honored with a majority of your votes my chief aim will be to advance the interests of my native County, and for this purpose I will be prepared to favor all legislation, no matter by whom introduced which in my judgment may tend in the direction.

Your local wants with reference to roads and bridges shall not be overlooked by me, and I will do my utmost to secure for Kent a fair share of public money.

I therefore solicit the active support of all who so generously assisted me in my former contest, as well as all others who are now willing to trust the representation of the County in my hands.

I will endeavor to make a thorough canvass of the County, and trust to have the pleasure of explaining my views to a large number of the electors.

Again soliciting your votes and support

I am, gentlemen,

Your obedient servant,

JOHN B. GOGAIN.

St. Mary's March 10, 1891.

How Many People.

Suffer miserably after eating, from sour stomach, which causes either pain and sickness, or disagreeable scalding in the throat and raising of food. Redeemed by a Mouse.

Some years ago a poet lived in Paris who had a kind heart and possessed considerable influence among rich and respectable people. He was sitting one day at his desk writing a poem when his servant brought him a letter from an old friend asking him to find employment "for the bearer." The poet told the servant to show the bearer into his study. He was an elderly man, tall, stoutly built, and scrupulously neat, with a full gray beard, and he looked about fifty.

"My friend tells me," said the poet, "that you have lately been bookkeeper with a tradesman in the Rue St. Denis?"

"Yes, sir," was the answer.

"Why did you leave your situation?"

The man hesitated and then said with an effort, "I left it because of an unfortunate discovery."

"But," said the poet, "what was the discovery? I must know, because if I recommend you to a place I shall take a certain responsibility."

"I will tell you, sir," said the man, looking full in his face as if he had suddenly taken a resolution to speak frankly. "I was in that house six months and no one had had any fault with me, when one day they heard of it—found out that—that I had been a convict at the galleys."

"Ah, indeed! you were a convict at the galleys," said the poet, in much the same tone as he had been saying:—"Ah, indeed! So you danced last night at court ball." "And how have you been living since you left your situation?"

"On a little money that I saved when I was in prison."

"I thought," said the poet, "that convicts were forbidden to take money from visitors."

"So they are, monsieur. But they all do it if they can get a chance. It seems no great harm to take it if we can do so without discovery."

"How do you manage it?" persisted the poet, who was curious to learn something of a convict's experiences.

"We had several ways," the man replied. "Mine was one not often used, but it always interested visitors. Some of us used to tame pet mice and teach them to bring us any coin thrown down for us by a visitor. We always keep these mice in our clothes, where they would nestle all day without stirring, and when a visitor dropped a little coin for a prisoner the mouse, at a faint chirrup from its master, would come out of its hiding place, slip down the leg of his trousers, secure the coin and run back to its master's breast the way it came."

"What an ingenious trick!" said the poet, much interested, but hardly able to believe the thing was true. "I should like to see it done," he added presently.

"You can, monsieur."

"What! Do you carry any trained mice about you?"

"Only one, monsieur, but I never can part from her. She is the only true friend I have left," he added sadly.

"Will you show me?"

"Certainly, monsieur. Please to throw down a coin—a cent, five cents—what you think proper."

The poet threw down a cent piece, which rolled along the floor. The man gave a slight chirrup with his lips and the sleeve on his left arm was agitated. Then the mouse came sliding down the leg of his pantaloons and appeared a moment later on the carpet. But, to the great surprise of both men, it stood still and seemed inclined to run back to its hiding place.

Its master, seeing its hesitation, chirruped again more loudly. The mouse obeyed. The coin had rolled under a piece of furniture in one corner of the study. Just as the little mouse was about to pick it up a piteous squeal was heard. Alas! the poet's great Angora cat had been lying asleep under the table.

When the convict saw what peril threatened his little friend he turned as pale as death and gave a cry of terror.

Poet and convict sprang at once to the rescue. The cat was driven away, but not before he had seized the prey in his sharp claws. The poor little mouse lay still with a drop of blood like a shining carbuncle on its glossy breast.

Its master picked it up and held it for a moment in his hands.

Then he laid it on the writing table, drew himself up to his full height, doubled his fists and sprang upon the poet, who received his attack with great composure, only saying, "Was it for murder you were sent to prison?"

At these words the poor fellow recovered himself.

"Let us see, my poor friend," said the poet, "if your poor little mouse is certainly dead."

* * * * *

I am sure that all who read this story and who sympathize with the convict in his sorrow for the injury to "his only true friend" will hope the little mouse got well, though it is hard to cure a wounded animal. I wish I could inform them, but I do not know. The story is a true one, and he from whom I had it could not tell. But this I know, that the poet was ever after a true friend to its master, and got him a situation in a bank, where he remains to this day an honest man.—Mrs. E. W. Latimer in N. Y. Herald.

"Do you think, cousin Fred, I'm very fond of dress?" "No I don't." "Why?" "Because I don't think you wear enough of it."
