"Ten days, or forty shillings," said the magistrate; and the prisoner a sullen-looking fellow, chose the latter alternative paid the fine, and was discharged. He walked moodily out of the court, but, when he reached the door, turned and showered a wholesale tirade of profane abuse upon the magistrate. Then he ran into the corridor; but before he could reach the street the officers gave chase. He was soon captured, and stood again at the bar. "Forty shillings more," said the Court. The money was paid. "If you had used more chaste and refined language," the magistrate continued, waving the fellow away, "you would not have been chased and refined."

Manners are of more importance than laws. Upon them in a great measure the laws depend. The law touches us but here and there, and now and then. Manners are what vex or soothe, corrupt or purify, exalt or debase, barbarize or refine us, by a constant, steady, uniform, insensible operation, like that of the air we breathe in. They give their whole form and color to our lives. According to their quality, they aid morals, they supply them or they totally destroy them.

Reports of severe frost and great depth of snow come from the woods. Yesterday a son of Ira Cosman, of the Nashwaak, who was at work in Stevens camp on the Allegash was taken home by another workman named Boon, with his feet badly frozen notwithstanding that he had been wearing four pair of socks under his moccasins. It is a serious case, and amputation may be necessary. The fall of snow last week was almost four feet in the vicinity of Allegash.—Fredericton Gleaser.

Cure is Cure
However it may be effected; but unjust prejudice often prevents people from trying a 'proprietary medicine,' until other remedies prove unavailing.
J. H. Ritchie, Commission Agent, Kingston, Australia, writes:
"For years a confirmed sceptic as to the merits of proprietary medicines, I was at last converted by the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. For months a bottle of this medicine, of which I had come into possession through the kindness of a friend, remained unopened in my closet, till one night I was seized with a violent cold accompanied by a racking cough. Having none of my usual remedies at hand, I thought of the Cherry Pectoral, and determined to give it a trial. The result was truly magical. Relief came almost instantly, and after repeating the dose, certainly not more than half a dozen times, I found myself thoroughly cured. Subsequently my daughter was cured of a severe cough by the use of the Cherry Pectoral. I recommend this preparation to all sufferers from throat and lung troubles."
For croup, whooping cough, bronchitis, asthma, and consumption the best remedy is

THE GULF STREAM.
IS IT A VOLUME OF WATER RUSHING OUT OF THE EARTH?

A New Theory About the Wonderful River in the Ocean—Where Does It Have Its Origin?—Recent Efforts of Scientists.

Has it ever occurred to the reader that the earth is not "solid," as we commonly say, but "honeycombed" with enormous cavities, or caverns, of all dimensions? If so, why should these caverns not be numerous everywhere in the crust of the earth, some easily discovered, as the Great Mammoth Cave of Kentucky, and others never yet seen by mortal eye? These huge cavities, originally formed when those portions of the earth's crust were in a melted state, and results of the unequal cooling of different materials of the composition and of other causes, if so situated may form the basis of very interesting theories. For instance, they may be generally filled with water, and there may exist great underground inland seas.

The source of the Gulf Stream has always been a disputed question. This great body of warm water is nothing more nor less than a stream or river in the ocean, flowing through the colder water. It was formerly thought that this stream was formed in the equatorial regions, where the surface water of the ocean was heated by the sun, and then began to flow northward. But of late a theory has been advanced that this stream, which is just as well defined off the Florida coast as off the Grand Banks, is a stream of hot water which issues from an orifice at the bottom of the sea somewhere among the Florida reefs.

Recently the Hydrographic office of the Navy Department has been endeavoring to determine if it is so, and efforts have been made to find this orifice by the use of the sounding line. But if a stream of hot water of the proportions of the Gulf Stream does issue from an orifice in the bed of the sea, then what a mighty boiler there must be somewhere in the bowels of the earth, and whenever these enormous fires burn through the rocky walls of the boiler and the water rushing in is instantly converted into steam, no wonder if explosions ensue that cause the overlying waters and the earth's crust to vibrate in great waves, which we call earthquakes.

Very probably this is the case, for abundant evidence of these explosions caused by the contact of fire and water when the earth's crust was first commencing to form is every where apparent, only the effect of atmospheric changes has covered the hardness of the face of the earth with a kindly soil, and vegetation has clothed this soil with the smile of life. But wherever the mountains are we see the evidences of these steam explosions.

There is one great rock in the Yosemite Valley several thousands of feet high, standing alone, from which some great convulsion of nature has split off a huge fragment and hurled it no one knows whither. But in the course of time the earth's crust has grown thicker, and we at present know little of these subterranean explosions, except when the solid earth trembles in an earthquake. Or perhaps it is the formation of steam that raises the lava to the mouth of the volcano and forces it out upon the plain, until another wall has been built between the fire and the water in the depths of the earth. Then, too, the hot springs may show the existence of subterranean waters.

There are numerous other peculiar circumstances which seem to be explained by this theory. For instance, it is said that a great storm on the Atlantic coast of the United States is accompanied by action of the geysers of the Yellowstone Valley, and this might be explained if it could be proved that a subterranean water way from ocean to springs existed. It may be that this sub-water protects the surface of the earth from a great heat. However, if the earth be not "solid," as we generally suppose, but permeated with seas, channels and passageways of various kinds, it gives a reasonable basis for some of Jules Verne's stories, and probably explains many occurrences that at present are only mysteries. It remains for the future submarine vessel to solve this problem.—Boston Journal.

Can Women Keep a Secret.
Every woman is not trusty any more than is every man; but quite as many women as men are so. In truth, it may be doubted if there are not more trusty women than there are men. Secrets are seldom imparted to persons who do not inspire confidence; they who tell what they call secrets to dozens of persons, without forming any positive opinion of their discrimination or reticence, are not apt to have any secrets from the entire circle of their acquaintances. They are mere babblers, gossips, tattlers, who try to bestow some importance on their communications by declaring them to be secrets. Such communications are usually commonplace, or of so little consequence as to make no distinct impression on the mind; needing to be labeled private, lest they be thought to belong to the public. Beside, the communicators are prone to the habit of repeating their stories to every one they can persuade to listen to them, and then pronouncing them confidential. To many to whom they are thus disclosed, the stories are already familiar, and politeness alone prevents the recipient from immediately saying as much. Candor and delicacy compel these, when informed of their confidential character, to acknowledge that they are by no means new. But the babblers—men for the most part—take no notice of this. They go their babbling round, and when they hear their current tale, they like to assume an injured air and to assert that some confounded woman has betrayed their confidence; that women never can keep a secret. That women should owe, in any measure, their false reputation to such a dunce is the best evidence of its falsity.
