Abram's Trip to Buctouche. (Concluded.)

The tall spruce trees tossed their giant arms in the darkness, as I wended my way homeward near Galloway Hill. And though I was hastening home to my hundred and eighty pounds of dear wife, to gently break the news to her about our great prospects; my love for the beauties of nature compelled me many times to halt in the darkness, and feast my eyes and listen. The mud was only fifteen inches deep, and I remembered the Blair government and the supervisor, and wondered if they ever would be rewarded for all the care and money they had expended making that road so pleasant to promenade on in the cool of the evening, and I blessed them.
And I looked away to the left over the long stretch of low level ground that the darkness prevented my seeing, but I knew it was there, for it was there when I passed in the morning; and when I considered that after a few short weeks would pass the moon would be shining right there some warm night, the frogs would be whistling, and the mosquito would be singing, and the cow bell would be merrily dingling; I became so enraptured, I found myself, involuntarily, as it were, reciting that interesting and tragic little poem, "The boy stood on the burning deck, his name was Pat Maloy." I tore myself away, and waded on; and when I came in view of Mr. Kennedy's house, I concluded I was getting nearer home every mile. I called and enquired the distance between his house and Kingston bridge; he told me as the crow flies it is just a mile. I looked upon him earnestly and said "Don't deceive me." He said "With my own eyes I saw the crow fly the whole distance, and I measured it myself." Again I plunged into the darkness, and after I had walked three miles I peered into the darkness, and discerned a moving object; I began to wonder how fast a bear could run; when a little nearer, I judged it to be a man, who perhaps would waylay and rob me; I concluded I would let him see I was not afraid, and I began to whistle.
A little nearer, I could see two people.
Oh, how I longed for home, but when I discerned one was a woman I began to think that perhaps he couldn't rob me, I had a great mind to tell him to try it on and offer to bet him fifty cents he couldn't waylay me, and rob me of my gold watch and two or three thousand dollars. But I thought perhaps the lady might get alarmed and faint away and fall down in the mud and get her dress soiled, and so I concluded to put it off until some other time and passed on. And after walking two miles more, making in all just five square miles, I arrived at Kingston bridge. I made up my mind that either the crow or I had made a slight mistake in the distance; and I turned round to go right back and step it off, and see where the mistake was situated; then I concluded that wouldn't be fair play in the crow's absence.

Arriving home I took Mrs. Abram aside and confidentially asked her how much she would give to be worth about one hundred million dollars. She looked at me and said, "Abram, you have lost your senses." Says I, "Listen attentively to me; a great man in Buctouche told me the national policy would kill anything, and I am going to construct a machine that will enable me to focus the whole national policy down a big long funnel, with a great reflector over the mouth of it that will reflect the national policy over a five acre field of potatoes, and entirely annihilate the potato bug with one flash, and I am going to get a patent and make millions of ready money," and I patted her on the cheek, and told her to just plod along and bear with the wolf howling at the door a few weeks longer. Says she, "Oh, Abram, the dreaded time seems to be drawing nigh; I have noticed your brain softening very fast of late, but little did I think so soon to see you entirely deprived of your reason." "All right, Mrs. Abram," says I, "if you prefer being as poor as Job's turkey it's all right, only don't you come billing and cooing around me any more, telling how nice it would be to have my life insured for a couple of thousand dollars, in case anything should happen. Oh no, Mrs. E. E., you need not bring any more romantic and beautifully illustrated reading matter on the wisdom of a husband having his life insured for the benefit of his poor little widow in the cottage by the sea side, so that she can join the W. C. T. U. and help to raise the standard of social purity, to pray for and pity the poor women who have no good clothes and not otherwise spiritually fitted to take part with them in the great excelsior work.
Oh, that would be the place for you, Mrs.
Abram, if you used the same political tactics as you use to secure my innocent confidence you would be president in six weeks, and the honorary members would be there every time; and let me tell you, only for you I would myself have been an honorary member of that glorious institution the same as R. Phinney." After thus soothing my injured feelings, I lay me down on my little bed to sleep, and dreamed I was a big potato bug, and the people gathered together to see what should be done with me; and after much discussion as to my size, origin, and future fate, it was decided to tie me to the grand stand in the driving park, to ascertain if it were possible to kill a potato bug by starvation.
And men brought a new clothes line and tied me and left me, and behold there came to me a man in the stillness of the night, under cover of the midnight darkness, and he set up a great machine composed of many wheels and wires; and while I lay on the ground filled with wonder and astonishment, he adjusted the end of one of the wires in my mouth, and as as he worked he communed with himself and I heard him say, "Now for the great destroying effect of the national policy, now for the testing of Abram's great scheme. I will turn on one-fourth of the power for the first test," and he turned a little wheel in the midst of many, and I heard a low rumbling noise like unto very distant thunder, and I felt a pleasant stimulating shock suddenly thrill through my whole system, and it seemed to be floating over a vast field of beautiful and thrifty potato vines and myostrils were filled with the sweet odor of countless blossoms, and when the man perceived that one-fourth of the power did not kill, but rather added greatly to my life, he turned on the whole power and effect of the machine, and as the force increased, my size and strength increased, and I began to struggle for freedom, and I became enraged, and broke the rope, and the man became alarmed and fled and went and aroused the people, and great numbers gathered to view me, and wonder at my greatly increased size in so short a time; and at morning a justice of the peace did come and caused investigation to ascertain what had caused my great and sudden growth, and the man having the machine was discovered, and he made confession and explanation, and when it was learned that the national policy was the cause of my exceeding great growth a newly appointed justice declared the whole proceedings ultra vires, it being a matter pertaining to the agricultural department of the federal government. The

'Kingstone!'

Should sufficient patronage be offered, the trotting bred stallion "Kingstone" will be held for the service of good roading mares at "The Cedars," Kingston, from each Saturday at noon till Monday noon during the season, and at other places at stated times where his services may be required, which places will be hereafter made known through circulars.

"Kingstone" is sired by "Rysdyke (653)" and he by the founder of the great Hamiltonian family, viz., "Rysdyke's Hamilton (10)"; "Rysdyke" the sire of "Kings-stone" has six of his get in the 230 list, including "Clingstone" 214, nicknamed "The Demon" on account of his bull dog determination displayed in his several hard contested races. "Kingstone's" dam "Duchess of Kent" was by the imported thorough-bred "Aracan" and her eighteen years' service over all kinds of roads proved her a superior roadster.

Coupled with the right kind of mares the get of "Kingstone" should show a fair percentage of fast trotters, while all should be superior roadsters, having a sufficient amount of the stamina and fine bone of the thorough-bred, as he, "King-stone," is half thorough-bred, sire and dam being each half.

Service fee $10.00 for the season, or $5 for single service. Be it known to all who it may concern "Life is too short to be spent in going to mill or market behind an ox or mule team."

Trotting Stallion
MYSTERIOUS
STRANGER.

Foaled July, 1885, dappled brown and weighs 1175 lbs., stands 16 hands high.
Sired by the noted stallion King Bird jr., (better known as Cail's King Bird); he by the imported King Bird; he by Winthrop Bush Messenger. Dam of Stranger was the noted Christopher mare; she by Morning Star; he by Old Saladin, an imported English thoroughbred. This horse's grand dam on both sides is Sala-din. A glance at the above pedigree will convince anyone that breeding from this horse will insure a trotter almost every time. John McMannus, of Memramcook, owns one of his get for which he refused the neat sum of two hundred dollars when one year old, being the only one of his get in New Brunswick.
