YEARS' EXPERIENCE.

27 YEARS IN THE PARISH OF RICHIBUCTO, HARNES AND COLLAR MAKING.

My eye is not yet dim nor my strength abated.
I use the best of Stock.
My work has been tested and not found wanting.
I am very busy.
I request the owners of horses to keep me busy.
Considering the quality
I verily believe my Harness the cheapest in the market.
I warrant my collars.
They are durable, easy and safe.

When The Face

Is constantly covered with eruptions, the need of a blood-purifier is plainly indicated. Washes and external applications are of no avail. The poison must be thoroughly eliminated from the system by stimulating the action of the liver and kidneys, which organs have become sluggish and inoperative, thereby throwing upon the skin the unnatural work of cleansing the system of its impurities. What is needed is Ayer's Sarsaparilla—the best of blood medicines.

"My face for years was covered with pimples and humors, for which I could find no remedy till I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Three bottles of this medicine effected a thorough cure. I can confidently recommend it to all suffering from similar troubles."

"I had been troubled for some time with an eruption of the skin which, till I was induced to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, defied all efforts to cure. After taking two bottles of this medicine, the eruption began to disappear, and with the third bottle it left me entirely."—Louis Degehardt, 125 Summer ave., Brooklyn, N. Y. Traveler for G. H. Buck & Co., Lithographers, 146 Centre st., New York.

THE QUEEN AND HER FAMILY.

Interesting Personal Details of the Empress of India.

LONDON, May 9.—The Londoners and their numerous American visitors here have had a good opportunity this week of seeing the Queen and most of her surviving family, and immense throngs have gathered in the parks and streets to welcome them. Year by year the curiosity to see the Queen increases, partly on account of the length of time she has occupied the throne, partly from her great universal popularity. Considering that she will this month complete her seventy-second year, her health is wonderfully good, the only ailment that troubles her being chronic rheumatism in one of her knees.

On this account a small pony carriage or bath chair is provided for her when she goes out on visits to her friends. She goes about without any difficulty with the aid of a stick.

She continues to be an early riser, and gets through a great deal of business before most people are astir. Her ladies in waiting have to be on the alert, for their royal mistress tolerates no imperfect service, and does not love to have stupid people about her. Yet though exacting at times she is the kindest woman in the world to those who are faithful and diligent, and never forgets nor neglects an old friend. That she prefers the old to the new perhaps accounts for preference for the veteran statesmen of the day over their younger rivals, yet she always paid marked attention to the rising young public men of either party, the reigning family having no politics, or none that the world need know anything about.

The Prince of Wales is always assiduous in his attention upon his mother—unlike any of his predecessors of the house of Guelf. All stories of his differences with the Queen are sheer inventions, mother and son being bound together by ties of closest affection.

On Thursday when the Queen went to the Naval Exhibition, the Prince walked by her side, pointing out all the objects of interest and answering all her questions with a promptness that left the great naval authorities nothing to say. The people are always delighted to see them together, and if the Princess of Wales is also of the party their satisfaction is complete. During her drives in the Park this week the Princess has fairly divided popular honors with the Queen, and certainly she has the advantage of beauty on her side, and as for youth, she scarcely looks a year older than when she first landed in England.

The rush to see the Princess as she passed was almost as great as that to see the Queen. Although the former makes her appearance almost every day.

Every detail of public affairs still passes through her hands. The first thing she did on her arrival in London this week was to have an interview of over an hour with Lord Salisbury, during which, no doubt, every domestic and foreign question of importance was touched upon. This week she returns for another drawing room, and then she will not remain long at Windsor. Hard work will have to be done by the Prince of Wales, and his worst enemy cannot allege that he neglects any part of his duties.

Manipulating Six Pennies.

Here is a very simple little trick with pennies that will catch the sharpest of your friends:—

Place six pennies on the table and arrange them in the form of a Roman cross—that is, four pennies in a perpendicular row for the upright, and one on each side of the second penny for the cross piece. You will then have two rows, the up and down row with four pennies in it and the horizontal row with three in it. Ask your friend to place them in two rows with four in a row by only changing the position of one penny.

They will try but they won't succeed. Then crush them and win, if you happen to be of that nature, by placing the lower penny of the perpendicular row on the centre penny.

Of course you did not stipulate that the coins were not to be placed on top of one another, and you have done the trick fairly.

But it always leads to a dispute.

What Class of Men know the Most?

So vast has the sum of human knowledge now become, that it is perfectly safe to say no single intellect, however brilliant, could possibly grasp more than relatively a little of the whole. In this position it becomes a curious and interesting inquiry what representative man, or perhaps more fairly, what class of men, has the widest and fullest acquaintance with all branches of knowledge.

It is easy to see that certain classes and professions must of necessity acquire a far more general knowledge than others; but there is probably no living human being, nor will there ever again exist one, of whom it could fairly and honestly be said, as it was of Lord Bacon, that he had acquired all knowledge. Even in his day the boast probably meant no more than that there was no distinct branch of human knowledge of which he had not some general grasp; but in the two centuries and a half which have elapsed since that colossal intellect flourished, the total sum has so immensely increased that even a superficial acquaintance with all things known is no longer possible to anyone.

Perhaps of mere elementary knowledge, schoolmasters and mistresses have a wider retention than any other class, because it often happens that, outside them, much of the material which formed the groundwork of education is wholly forgotten in later and profounder years. Mr. Gladstone, some years ago, nonplussed the House of Commons by suggesting that not half a dozen of his hearers could tell him on the spur of the moment the exact location of the Bay of Fundy; and probably the most eloquent and polished orators in the same body would be equally puzzled if asked right off the reel to parse, or grammatically dissect, the sentence.

Considering all the bearings of the question, we should be inclined to give the palm for knowing the most, as a class, to our barristers in good practice. The infinite variety of matters with which counsel have to deal in our law courts every day, and the minuteness and thoroughness with which, for the time being at any rate, they have to master the subject in hand, afford them unrivalled facilities for acquiring knowledge over an enormous field.

The way in which an eminent counsel will put witnesses of the most exalted attainments in all the arts and sciences, and in all the practices of trade, through their paces, is simply amazing. Imagine a learned counsel, to say nothing of his attainments in the law, having to tackle the intricacies of a disputed chemical patent; in connection with which he has to examine and cross-examine on matters of the utmost nicety and technicality the highest available authorities, and in respect of which any blundering on his part might be of the gravest consequence. The next day, perhaps, he is in medias res with some nice point in civil engineering, and before the week is out is exposing all the most knowing tricks of a trade.

Of course, much of the facility and knowledge he displays over such wide and varied fields, is due to able and judicious cramming. His brief is the result of a careful preliminary analysis of the subject with which he has to deal, and at his elbow he has a watchful junior, in his turn primed by the prominent witnesses on his side. With these aids your barrister develops a mastery of things in general which is simply bewildering to the plodding student. Like all cramming, however, the knowledge so acquired is very fleeting in character. But a little will remain, and that little in the accretion of many years of practice must be very great, and at any rate ought to make the successful barrister the best-informed of men.—English paper.

THE WORLD OVER.

Mrs. "Dr." Claire Taylor of Indianapolis has gone to France to bury the heart, hands and feet of her mother, the remainder of the body having been buried at Peru. It was her mother's strange request.

The true Bengal tiger is dying out, owing to the advance of civilization and the rewards offered for their destruction. They are now rare in localities where they were formerly numerous.

It is reported that an English syndicate has secured options on California orange farms. A number of sons of wealthy Englishmen propose to engage in orange growing, making California their home.

Charles Deforge, a Frenchman living at Chicopee, Mass., reported to the police that he frequently heard strange noises in the basement of his house which disturbed him and that a few days ago he dreamed there was a dead body in the cellar. On Monday Officer Gibson dug up in the cellar the skeleton of a baby wrapped in cloth. Three years ago the body of a man was found in the same cellar, buried seven feet deep.

San Francisco despatch:—George L. Sturtevant, a young man, has just succumbed to Addison's disease, his skin becoming black as a negro's. Three years ago, when the disease first manifested itself, Sturtevant's clear skin was his chief claim to beauty. At the time of death his body was perfectly black. The first indication of the disease was the appearance on the tongue of a black pigment formation about the size of a pea. Two months afterwards his skin assumed the sallow hue of jaundice. A diagnosis by experts finally established the fact that he had Addison's disease. In the second year his skin changed to a bronze tint, and in the third year, from the chest down he was a dead black. His tongue was also black. He had no pain, and amused himself by reading and playing on the piano, but complained of great languor. His case had one peculiarity never before observed. The majority of patients die in the second year. Sturtevant lived the full limit of three years, but showed no signs of insanity. The disease is due to the decomposition of the outer coating of the kidneys.

"A man who has tried" it says that two or three dandelion leaves, chewed before going to bed, will always induce sleep, no matter how worried a person may be. And they cause no weariness, or headache such as follows chloral or morphine.

There are 5,000 prisoners in Russia awaiting suitable weather for their transportation to Siberia. The prisoners will be voluntarily accompanied by their wives and families numbering 10,000 persons.
