SENTENCED TO DEATH.

Extraordinary Criminal Career of a Canadian Doctor.

LONDON, Oct. 21.—The jury in the case of Neill, the poisoner of Matilda Clover and other women, this morning returned a verdict of guilty. Justice Hawkins at once sentenced Neill to be hanged.

CRIMES AND CAREER OF THOMAS NEILL.

Our readers may, perhaps, have forgotten the principal incidents in the series of remarkable crimes of which Thomas Neill is accused. A resume of the events that led to his arrest and trial on the charge of wilful murder is, therefore, given.

On the night of April 11 last two girls named Alice Marsh and Emma Shrivell, aged respectively twenty-one and eighteen years, received a man in their apartments at No. 113 Stanford street, Lambeth. This man remained with the girls until two o'clock the next morning. Shortly after he left the house the two girls were found in agony on the floor by the landlady of the premises, a Mrs. Voght. The girls belonged to the unfortunate class, and an officer was notified and they were removed to St. Thomas' hospital. The Marsh girl died on the way to the hospital, and the Shrivell girl died three hours after she was admitted. It was thought at first that the girls had been poisoned by tinned salmon, of which they had partaken, but it was subsequently learned that they had been poisoned with strychnine. On examining the rooms occupied by the girls a letter was found, dated April 10, accepting an invitation to take tea with them the next night. This letter was signed George Clifton, but it afterward transpired that the writer was known to the girls as Fred. No trace of the author of the letter could be found, and for a time the case was referred to as the "Lambeth mystery."

When the matter of the death of the two girls came before the coroner for investigation that official received a letter, which was proved to have been in the handwriting of a woman named Sebastiani, whom Neill was at one time engaged to marry. In this letter the writer said she was in a position to give valuable information, which would show that the two girls had been poisoned by a young man named Harper.

The letter was placed in the hands of the police, and from inquiries that were instituted they discovered that about the same time the coroner had received the letter Dr. Harper, of Barnstable, had also received a letter alleged to have been sent by Neill, in which he demanded the sum of $1,500, and intimating that unless the sum was paid the writer would give information showing that Dr. Harper's son had poisoned the Marsh and Shrivell girls. Young Harper was at that time a student at St. Thomas' Hospital and lodged in the same house as Neill at Lambeth.

On a charge of attempted blackmail preferred against him by Dr. Harper Neill was arrested, and then followed the unravelling of the mystery. It was learned that he had written letters to Dr. Broadbent, a well known London practitioner; to the Hon. W. F. D. Smith, son of the late Right Hon. W. H. Smith, and to Countess Russell, who, during the trial of her suit for a judicial separation from her husband, Earl Russell, in December, 1891, had received a letter, alleged to have been written by Neill, accusing the Earl of having poisoned the Clover girl.

Neill is a Canadian and in the course of his life he has been in close contact with the police of various cities in the United States and Canada.

In Canada Neill, or as he is known here "Dr. Thomas Cream," has an unenviable reputation. He was born at Quebec, studied medicine at McGill College, Montreal, and was graduated in 1878. He took up practice at Kingston, Ontario, and had been there only a short time before he was suspected of illegal practices. The body of a young woman was found in a shed back of Neill's office and a post-mortem examination showed that she had died from the effects of a criminal operation.

Though the people were morally certain Neill had performed the operation there was not legal evidence enough to warrant his arrest. Public opinion, however, forced him to leave Kingston and he went to Hamilton, Ontario. Here he was shortly afterward arrested on a charge of killing a woman by performing an illegal operation on her, but the charge could not be proved against him. Again he changed his residence, this time going to Chicago. This was about 1878. He had only been in that city a short time when he was again arrested on a charge of causing a woman's death by malpractice. The crime was proved against him and he was sentenced to imprisonment for life. He served thirteen years of this sentence and was then released on account of ill-health.

In the meantime his father had died leaving him $16,000, and he went to England in a short time after his release. It is said that while Neill was in Ontario he was forced to marry a girl he had wronged. Neill sought to escape marriage by flight, but relatives of the girl caught him just as he was boarding a train and he was marched to the altar at the point of a pistol.

His family is well known in Quebec and highly respected.

Belief that Capt. Lawlor Perished in the Wave.

Since Capt. W. Lawlor, the daring transatlantic navigator, left North Sidney, Cape Breton, on his voyage to Queens-town, in his midged 12-foot canvas, shoe-shaped craft, nothing has been heard of him.

And not even his most intimate friends have given up hope, and believe that he has perished.

"If he was alive and his little craft was on her keel he would have been heard from," his friends say, for he would undoubtedly have fallen in with some passing vessel. If not the chances are that he would ere this have died of starvation, for his boat was not large enough to carry a supply of food sufficient to have lasted him for three months, for it is just about that long since there was news of him. It is four months and 15 days since he left Lincoln's wharf in this city on his voyage. He started on Sunday, June 5th, at 6 o'clock p. m. Word was received from him by his wife in a letter dated North Sydney, in which he stated that he had put in for repairs, but was soon to resume his voyage.

Mrs. Lawlor lives at 229 Cherry street, Chelsea. She is a pleasant, sweet-faced woman, about 35 years of age, and the mother of four children, all living. Her face plainly shows the great strain the uncertainty as to her husband's fate is upon her. She has, however, the greatest faith in his ability as a sailor, and all that her friends and the newspapers have said cannot make her believe that he is dead. She clings to the hope that perhaps he has been picked up by some vessel bound for a distant port. If this were the first time he had started out on such a venture, she would long ere this have mourned him as dead; but this is his third voyage, the other two having been successful. On both other voyages she received all sorts of reports concerning his shipwreck and death, all of which were subsequently proven untrue by his safe arrival on the other side.

In 1889 he sailed from New York to Havre in the Neversink, making the trip in 28 days. Then in 1891 he went over in a 14-foot boat, the Sea Serpent. This was the smallest boat that ever sailed across the Atlantic. He started from Crescent Beach and went to England. It took him 42 days.

Fate seemed against Capt. Lawlor at the very outset of this voyage, for he had hardly left the end of Lincoln's wharf Commercial street, when he was run into by a schooner and the bowsprit of his boat carried away.

He put into Marblehead and after repairing the damage, set sail for St. John's N. F.

He arrived at Gloucester, June 7, and at noon the following day he again started out. His departure from here was witnessed by his wife and boy and fully 1,000 spectators joining in giving him an ovation.

His next stop was at Newburyport. From there he sailed to Booth Bay, Me., where he landed 150 pounds of stores, which he sent to Halifax, and had his boat refitted. He then followed the Nova Scotia shore to Canso, went through the Lennox passage, St. Peter's canal and Bras D'or lake to Sydney. From here the last word was received by his wife from him. The rest of his journey lay across the gulf of St. Lawrence to St. John's, N. F., where his final start was to have been made.

Capt. Lawlor expressed himself at several points as being well satisfied with his boat, and that he was confident that he would accomplish his undertaking. Probably his fate if lost, may never be clearly known, but, in justice to Capt. Lawlor, it should be said, that no matter how many other men have made foolhardy voyages attempted dangerous feats for notoriety alone, he risked his life solely to better his condition and that of his family financially. Had he been successful in this undertaking, he and his boat would have been on exhibition at the World's Fair, Chicago, and he would have realized quite a snug sum. Space No. 1801 had been set apart for his exhibit.

Being a man who had led an adventurous life and had become inured to all sorts of hardships, Capt. Lawlor knew not what fear was, and honestly thought that he could easily accomplish the dangerous self-imposed task.

Archibald Settlement, Restigouche.

A shingle mill is being erected in this settlement by Messrs. R. and A. McLean. There are already upwards of 50 shingle machines in operation in the county, which have created a great activity in business, and given employment to a great number of men in working the mills and procuring cedar. Large parties are going into the woods for the winter's work.

The potato crop which has been lately harvested is above the average, and of superior quality. For several weeks past considerable business has been carried on in shipping them for different places. As many as ten to fifteen carts were seen at a station at one time loaded with potatoes. The price is from 80 to 90 cents according to kind. If it were not for the duty of 75 cents on the barrel in the States the prices would be far higher, and remunerate the farmer much better for his labors. The northern counties could produce an immense quantity of potatoes as the soil is specially adapted for them, and as there is abundance of manure along the sea shore, free trade with the states would be of great advantage to these counties, and even to the whole province.

Piles! Piles! Itching Piles.

Symptoms.—Moisture; intense itching and stinging; most at night; worse by scratching. If allowed to continue tumors form, which often bleed and ulcerate, becoming very sore. Sway's Ointment stops the itching and bleeding, heals ulceration, and in most cases removes the tumors. At druggists, or by mail, for 50 cents. COLUMBIA, S. C., Oct. 20.—The house of Josh Adams near Claremont, Sumpter county, was burned yesterday. His four little children who were locked in the house while the father and mother attended religious service were burned to death.

The great Dr. Boerhaave left three directions for preserving the health—keep the feet warm, the head cool, and the bowels open. Had he practised in our day, he might have added: and purify the blood with Ayer's Sarsaparilla; for he certainly would consider it the best.

"German Syrup"

Here is an incident from the South—Mississippi, written in April, 1890, just after the Grippe had visited that country. "I am a farmer, one of those who have to rise early and work late. At the beginning of last Winter I was on a trip to the City of Vicksburg, Miss., where I got well drenched in a shower of rain. I went home and was soon after seized with a dry, hacking cough. This grew worse every day, until I had to seek relief. I consulted Dr. Dixon who has since died, and he told me to get a bottle of Boschee's German Syrup. Meantime my cough grew worse and worse and then the Grippe came along and I caught that also very severely. My condition then compelled me to do something. I got two bottles of German Syrup. I began using them, and before taking much of the second bottle, I was entirely clear of the Cough that had hung to me so long, the Grippe, and all its bad effects. I felt tip-top and have felt that way ever since." PETER J. BRIALS, JR., Cayuga, Hines Co., Miss.

Sense of Touch in Man.

The sense of touch in man is most highly developed on the skin, but mucous or serous surfaces are also capable of conveying impressions. Some parts of the body are more sensitive than others, and are usually devoid of hairs, as the tip of the tongue, the ends of the fingers and the lips. It will be noticed that these are so situated as to keep us conveniently informed of what is going on around us.

Some of our most important organs—for instance, the heart, the brain and the lungs—are, strange to say, quite insensible to touch, thus showing that not only are nerves necessary for the sensation, but also the special end organs. The curious fact was noticed with the greatest astonishment by Harvey, who, while treating a patient for an abscess that caused a large cavity in his side, found that, when he put his fingers into this cavity he could actually take hold of the heart without the patient being in the least aware of what he was doing! This so interested Harvey that he brought King Charles I. to the man's bedside that "he might himself behold and touch so extraordinary a thing."

In certain operations a piece of skin is removed from the forehead to the nose; and it is stated that the patient, oddly enough, feels as if the new nasal part were still in his forehead, and may have a headache in his nose!—Chambers's Journal.
