

To the Editor of The Review.

DEAR SIR:—In looking over some old letters lately, I found one from my late brother, dated from Barceely, 13th Nov., 1858. He enlisted in the 78th Highlanders when 16 years of age, and at the date of his letter the regiment had been 11 years in India. They were on their way home to Calcutta when the mutiny broke out, and they had to return and fought at the taking of Delhi, Cawnpore and Lucknow. He rose to be sergeant-major, and was volunteer instructor for Rosshire, Scotland, for 21 years before his death.

JOHN MOWAT.
Campbellton, N. B., Aug. 20, 1892.

DEAR BROTHER JOHN:—Since I last wrote you, two years ago, I have gone through some of the most arduous operations British soldiers have ever been called upon to perform. We were going home with light hearts and most of us with lighter purses. Some men have got some "loot," as we call it. I only got 3 rupees off one Sepoy, and had to fight for that. I wounded him slightly, and as I passed him he started up. I being unloaded, he went at me with his tulwar, or sword, he was an artillery officer and had fought his gun within fifty yards of us, I made a few passes at him with my bayonet—it was amongst trees, not favorable for such exercise—I threw him off his guard, the bayonet entered his eye and went clean through his head. I had been 3 months in hospital on the way down from the hills with my second attack of fever, but had recovered my old weight of 14 stone, and the native 10 stone had to go down. I had lost one kit at Poonah, another in Persia, another when the Gwalior contingent beat back Windham, of Redan fame, so it has taken more than my pay so far. However, we are hoping for luck yet, for I tell you, John, we will show no mercy to those infernal black devils, after their action at Cawnpore, and we of the 78th have sworn to revenge it, and our only motto is, "Conquer or die." You must understand we were collecting our troops and ordoning them devils in. Our regiment was not intended to be very actively engaged until they attempt breaking through. Then we will, I know be in the thick of it, and we will hunt them like deer. A few troops have entered Oude already, and the enemy have lost a good deal of men and material, and some of their strongholds have been taken. One was taken on the 8th with trifling loss to us. This cord is drawing round until we make them cross the Ganges, when it will be a regular battle. You see, they have until the end of the month to come in and submit; some of them will do so, but those whose hands are stained with blood, like the Nana's, will work on the fears of the others, so many will be deterred from doing so.

Perhaps you would like my ideas of the cause of the mutiny, and how things went on in this beautiful country when the Sepoys thought proper to try to raise the throne of Timour to its ancient glory, and how miserably they failed.

No doubt the great Zemindars (landholders) were the first to entertain hatred towards the British. This comes through the continuous and ruinous system of annexation pursued by the late government, and doing away with the time honored custom of adoption, which has been in use from time immemorial. Britain, in forcing her own custom of lineal descendants upon the natives of this country, broke the last link of the chain which held them together. The Nana is an adopted son of the old Ras. When the old Ras died, his pension died with him, but gave the Nana the estates of Bithoor. He tried hard to get the pension, but could not obtain it. He then applied for the command of the Gwalior regular cavalry, but that was also refused him. No doubt he brooded over his fancied wrongs for years, still he kept a fair face to the government, and associated with the officers of the Cawnpore garrison even until the last moment, when he revealed upon General Wheeler to give the treasury and magazine into his keeping, saying he would take charge of them with his own troops, of which he had 4,000 of all sorts. The 3 regiments of Sepoys who mutinied then left it untouched; they were in full march to Delhi when the fiend Nana went after them, telling them they would be more acceptable at Delhi if they killed all the Europeans in Cawnpore and took the treasury with them. So they turned, killed every one they could catch, and burned and looted the Europeans' houses. There were some two hundred British troops in the residency or barracks, and they proved a tough morsel to digest. The Sepoys went systematically to work, brought 12 or 14 heavy guns to bear on them, where about 800 human beings, the greater number women and children, were stowed away, with nothing to shelter them from the 24 lb. balls which drove through and through the walls. This they stood for 22 days; how they did it no one knows, for not a square foot of the walls were left but what was perforated with the round shot. The Nana saw time was pressing. Havelock was pushing up the country with a small force, and he knew he would have to meet him, so he sent to Wheeler to negotiate. The officers were against having anything to do with Nana. Wheeler said, "Nana has always been friendly, why not trust him now?" After parleying a little, and Wheeler completely in the dark as to any relief, Nana promised to send them all safe to Allahabad in boats, setting a day for the purpose; as soon as the truce was proclaimed, the Sepoys rushed the entrenchments, laying violent hands on everything. At last the embarkation was made, a breakfast provided for the men, and every person allowed to take what they could carry. On some pretence he got the women to remain until the last, and when he got the men all on board 2 guns opened on the boats with grape and cannister. The men were powerless, and were soon killed or drowned, and the women were given up to the cursed Sepays and Sowars, over which, John, I dare not write. This much I will say, their action to those poor women made perfect butchers and devils of us soldiers, one of our battle cries when our arms were stiff from slaughter was, "Slay, and spare not," and John, some of our officers were as bad as the men. The Nana now was at full liberty to proceed down country. The Sepoys were bound for Delhi, but the Nana, having got power from the great king at Delhi, who now thought himself secure, to act as his viceroy at Cawnpore, and prevent any assistance coming up to their countrymen at Delhi, retained the Sepoys to co-operate with his 4,000 troops and 13 guns, which he pushed down the country to oppose Major Renaud of the Madras Fusiliers, who was pushing up with 700 men to succor Wheeler, when he heard of the Nana's treachery he halted 14 miles from Futtpore. The morning the Nana's troops reached Futtpore, we joined Renaud with 6 field guns and 1,000 effectives, mostly the 78th and 66th, at 10 o'clock on the morning of the 12th July, 1857. It was well we did, Renaud's force were mostly native, and they would have been cut to pieces in short order. He was ready to go along; after our night's march of 17 miles we kept on, getting within 5 miles of Futtpore. Our tents coming in, we commenced pitching, and the corporal had gone to draw the grog. A small scouting party had gone towards the town. They had not gone far when signs of a movement was heard ahead. What was this? Only the Sepoys on the move to attack Renaud's small party. But, ah! little did they know that Havelock was in charge. It surprised them much to think so small a party should push on, and they opened at once on our little scouting party. Halloa, boys, what's this? We soon knew; an orderly soon told Havelock the enemy was in force, marching to attack us. "Fall in, my boys!" shouts old Havelock. Jump and strike, was the word; but no confusion. Tents fell to the ground, belts were girded on, the bung placed in the commissary's cask, and in less time than I have written—or you have read—this, every man stood to his arms. Never expecting to see us fellows, the Nana's mixed up force was thunder-struck. Never expecting to have to retreat, they left no way open, the only road was choked up with baggage and stores, and they would not even stand our opening salute with our little field guns, but turned and fled; leaving to a tired out army, who had made a 13 hours' steady march, baggage without end, 13 guns and mortars, and £7,000 in silver. Not a man of us was touched by the enemy, but we lost quite a few by sunstroke, for John, it is terrible for a European to stand the heat of the noonday. On the 16th, we drove them back twice again, once in the morning and once in the evening. Our regiment lost three killed and four wounded. Next day we followed them sharp, not giving them time to destroy roads or bridges. They made a stand about 4 miles from Cawnpore, partly destroying the road, with a battery of 24 pounders commanding it. We quietly slipped around their left flank, threatening their retreat on Cawnpore.

St. Margarets Notes.
Miss Jane McDonald, ever sociable, has just returned from her visit to Uncle Sam's territory. We are pleased to see Miss McDonald in our midst.

On Sunday we had a visit from Miss Dollie Hackett, of Kouchibouguac, and Miss Marcella Fitzgerald, of Chatham. They enjoyed their visit much indeed, which was due, no doubt, to the geniality of some of our young gents.

Dame Rumor says one of our popular young ladies is about to be united by the holy bands of wedlock. It is to be hoped that she will ever be happy.

We are told that Charlie, the recreant lover, has returned to his allegiance. Did you ever get left?

Mr. Charles A. Rainsborough, and his brother, Laurence, are visiting their uncle on Fox Island.

Miss Martha Mazerolle left us, after a short visit to return to her home in Sapin. We tender our sympathy to those sighing gents who found that the time of her sojourn here was all but too short.

Miss Mary Power is visiting friends in Laketon. Joe says he is always happy to see her smiling face.

The annual exhibition took place down river last week. Wild beasts of all kinds could be seen. By all appearances Sandy is well pleased.

Mr. Benj Williams, who has been spending a few weeks of his vacation with his uncle, Rev. Father Pattenaude, will soon leave for Antigonish College.

Mr. Anglin Flanagan, of Moncton, was the guest of Mr. P. Flanagan this week. GREENBOCH.

The electors of Kent, my interests are your interests, any increase in your taxes caused by the present dominant party are an increase in mine. In supporting me during this contest, you are supporting your friend, let him be rich or poor.

Previous to election, I purpose addressing you in French and English throughout the different parishes.
