JIM CAPTURED!

NEAR HARCOURT AND TAKEN TO MONCTON.

By Special Constables Carroll and Lance Wilbur.

(Condensed from Transcript.)

"Jim" has been captured! The much sought for desperado was brought to town last night in charge of special constables Carroll of Pictou and Delancy Wilbur of Moncton.

On Thursday afternoon a strange individual addressed himself to Ald. Forbes, who at first did not recognize him. He said he was Carroll, and had come to Moncton from Pictou to have a hand in the search for Jim.

"You know," he said, "I am a bit superstitious; and I have great confidence in dreams at times. I dreamed the other night that you and I were mixed up with 'Jim' somewhere and that I was in a struggle and clinch with him in a house. The dream has impressed me so much that I have come here to have a try." He then asked Forbes to get him an assistant, and Delancy M. Wilbur was obtained, and the two were taken before Stipendiary Wortman on Thursday afternoon, and sworn in as special constables. Carroll placed considerable confidence in the clue furnished by Enoch Steeves' story as reported in the press; and they went north on the Quebec express at 1.15 on Friday morning. Nothing more was heard of them until shortly after seven last night, when the Western Union Telegraph Co. caused the Telephone Co. to notify the press that the arrest had been made. At the same time Ald. Forbes of the police committee received the following telegram:—

Harcourt, Aug. 12.

Temple Forbes,

Arrested Jim; on 38 for Moncton. Three cheers for Pictou.

P. O. CARROLL.

The news soon spread and long before the freight from Campbellton was due a large crowd had gathered at I. C. R. depot. The crowd was so large and the excitement so intense that the authorities were afraid to let the train stop at the depot. The train stopped at the north crossing on Main street. But a large crowd which had become suspicious were at the crossing; and, upon the stopping of the train, that vicinity was black with people. When the crowd at the station saw the train stop they also made a rush. The prisoner was taken out of the train, run through the crowd to the foot of Cameron street, where the Commercial hack was in waiting. Jim was rapidly driven to the station by a hack street route to avoid the howling of the excited mob. Upon arriving at Duke street it was found that the street from the corner of Main was a living mass of people. It was with difficulty the prisoner was taken out of the hack.

"Jim" presented a most deplorable spectacle. He was dirt covered, stained with blood, with a large gash over his right eye and his nose split for two inches. The blood and dirt, with the scared expression of his face after having run the gauntlet of the mob will be long remembered. He was instantly hustled into a cell.

CARROLL'S ACCOUNT OF THE CAPTURE.

Peter O. Carroll is a tall, strapping Pictou boy, and formerly chief of police of Pictou town.

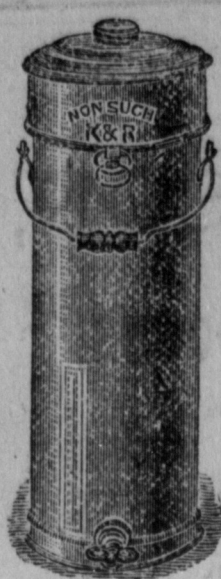

Interviewed by a Transcript representative he says:—"It was owing largely to Enoch Steeves' story that he started to go North. We left on the 1.15 express on Friday morning and got off at Rogersville, arriving there at 2.46. We walked back to Kent Junction and then took the train to Harcourt. At Harcourt we heard that a tramp had entered a house at Bass River and taken a pair of shoes, a hard hat and a dozen of eggs. We immediately hired a horse and drove down to Timpson's house—that is the man from whom the things had been stolen. This is about eight miles from Harcourt. Timpson, it appears, has seen the tramp in the morning, actually wearing Jim's (Timpson's) stolen shoes; and he gave me a description of the man. It tallied with that of Jim. We also met and interviewed a neighbor by the name of Thompson, in whose barn we learnt the tramp had slept the night previous. We traced the tramp's trail from the footprints in the muddy road. We hired a team from Robt. Lawson, at Main River, for one dollar; and the owner of the team got Thompson to drive it. About half way back to Harcourt I noticed that the foot prints led from the road into the residence of Robert Carter. I decided to go into the house, and left Wilbur and the driver on the wagon. I said, 'Lance, I am going to see if he is here.' Thompson kept saying that he was not there, and that we had better go back. I, however, noticed a peculiarity about the foot prints and determined to go into the house. Timpson, the owner of the stolen shoes worn by the tramp, had told me that one half the inside of the left heel was off. I could clearly see that the footprints in the mud leading to the house showed this peculiarity. I said to myself, 'No, I am going to follow this trail if it takes me to Harcourt. I will not go back.' I followed the trail into the house. The kitchen door was standing open. Mr. Carter, the owner of the house, was sitting inside on the right of the door, and another man—the present prisoner—was sitting on the left and facing me. I asked Mr. Carter if he had seen a man passing up the road within the past half an hour, and he said 'No.'

Jim pricked up his ears at this question and seemed interested. He looked at me; and I looked closely at him. From the description I recognized him as 'Jim.' I stepped inside the door close up to him and said, 'What is your name?' He replied 'Tom Moore.' I said, 'Where do you live?' He replied, 'About nine miles below,' and added that he was working with a man on a farm. I turned to Mr. Carter and asked, 'Do you know this man?' and he said 'No.' Says I, 'Will you tell the men in the wagon to come here?' At this Jim reached his hand for his revolver in his pants pocket. He pulled it half way out and I grabbed his wrist. The revolver is a Boston Bulldog, 38 calibre; and has five chambers all loaded. As I grabbed his wrist with my left hand, I hit a heavy blow with my right. You can see that my hand is bruised and swollen from the force of the blow.

I struck him twice and knocked him on the floor. He still held on to the revolver, and as he fell face downwards his arm with the revolver was underneath him. I pulled my own revolver out of my pocket and placed it to his ear, as I was afraid he might turn over and shoot me; a second thought struck me and I said to myself, 'No, I will take him alive or not at all. I then struck him the third time, and Jim said 'Hold on, I will give in.' I then caught hold of him, lifted him from the floor and threw him bodily out of doors, so that those in the wagon could see him and come to my assistance. I followed him out and struck him again. Wilbur then came to my help, and I grabbed the revolver from Jim and handed it to Wilbur. The latter covered Jim with two revolvers while I handcuffed him. I then searched the prisoner for the other revolver which it was reported he had; but I could not find any. I did however find three razors in cases; one black silk cap, one fore and aft cap (a peak before and behind) and three 38 calibre cartridges. We then took the prisoner to Harcourt. After the arrest the prisoner said 'Big fellow had I got my revolver out of my pocket I would have fixed you; but you were too quick for me. If I shot Steadman I am sorry for it—I am willing to hang for it; but I do not think I shot him!' In the meantime we cautioned him not to say anything about the matter as it would be brought up in evidence against him. Jim said that he had graduated in an Ontario college and was well brought up by a good father and mother. But he says 'You know how it is; I was like a good garden left alone—I ran all weeds. I am a hardened criminal.'

Jim Thompson gives his testimony as follows:—"About 9.30 Friday morning, I left my home, which is situated at Bass River a few miles the other side of Harcourt and on strolling through my fields arrived at one of my barns situated about a mile and a half from my place of residence. On nearing the barn, I noticed the door open, and as a number of tramps had been in that vicinity for some time past, went into the barn to see if any one had stayed there over night. Upon entering the barn I climbed upon the straw mow, when I noticed there a pile of straw in one corner was higher than the level of the straw, I bent down and upon moving the straw bare a man's knee. The stranger sat up and put his hand in his hip pocket, and drew a revolver. I immediately grappled with him and caught hold of his wrists, which I held fast. During Thursday night a house belonging to John Timpson had been broken into and a pair of boots, a cap and a number of eggs were stolen. Upon looking at the stranger's feet I noticed the boots and recognized them as a pair owned by Mr. Timpson. I referred to the boots and asked him where he got them. He would not answer. We then fell into a conversation during which I still kept a grip on his wrists. He would not give me any definite answer to any of my questions relative to his name, place of residence, or business. He begged of me to let him go, stating that he would not shoot me. I did not speak of the Moncton murder, as I was afraid he might suspect me. As no one was in sight, and as
