Electors of Kent.

Will you treat with contempt your birth-right or free
And be subject to tyranny bending the knee;
Will you vote for the power usurping extreme,
For the one man government despotic extreme,
Is responsible government for which our fathers contended,
In this one man Blair and his government ended.
Shall your franchise inherited when your fathers were freed,
Be devoured like pottage by Blair in his greed.
Remember his pledges recorded on high,
When economy and retrenchment was his battle cry.
Now ponder the debt above your heads hanging o'er,
And the wolf of taxation that howls at your door.
Where was retrenchment when Blair's government was framed?
Not an officer less, nor a position less named.
Where was economy when Tweedie was bought?
And where the peoples rights when the Balmoney was sought?
Where was the people's money when McQueen was elected?
Where was Kent's freedom when Legere was selected?
Did the people think Angus was wise and discreet,
With sufficient intelligence their requirements to meet?
Nay, electors, of Kent it was the government spoil,
And back on itself does the effect now recoil.
Rise, ye men of Kent,
That insult to your intelligence now rise and resent.
Base the submission moved by a base spirit,
Accepting of bondage to patiently bear it.
Would you help crush the government composed of one man?
Then vote for New Brunswick for Phinney and Goggin,
And stand guard o'er the freedom your fathers have won.
Yea, protect it and pass it on down to your political death sentence on the man who would dare
Dictate and usurp, as does Andrew G. Blair.

Oct. 10th.—The advance guard of winter paid us a visit in the form of jack frost.

Harvesting is pretty nearly over. The grain crops with the exception of oats is below the average. The potato crop is almost a total failure in some localities, being in some instances not worth digging. But of course there are exceptions, and a good field of potatoes may be found occasionally.

The house of Mr. Jacques LeBlanc was burned to the ground a few days ago. All the household effects together with forty bushels of wheat were burned. Mr. LeBlanc had $1200 insurance on his dwelling.

DIXIE.

To the Editor of The Review:

I have for years been an ardent admirer of A. G. Blair, attorney-general, and leader of the New Brunswick government. When I have heard men characterize him as a tyrant, a man of no word, a political mountebank, a dishonest politician, one who deserved the reputation of selling his friends to purchase his enemies—when I heard our representative, James D. Phinney, tell him on the public platform at Richibucto that he would even barter the office of attorney-general to retain power—I thought it inconsistent with the charge that he had locked his colleagues' mouths and thrown away the key. I felt as if his traducers were disappointed and jealous, and I admired the man for many of the acts his culprits charged against him.

When Blair visited our county last fall, with his aides-de-camp—Labilliois and Wilson, asserting that he had come to win, many of his admirers felt new courage—in fact, felt we could not be beaten. We felt we had a leader we were proud to follow. We advised our neighbors that Blair was a man of his word, who stuck to his friends, regardless of consequences, instancing the Ritchie appointment at St. John as a proof. Phinney, we argued, would be glad to get back into the Blair fold, but Blair would not have him. Blair never took up a man who had gone back on him. But, oh! Mr. Editor, how the glorious figure has changed. The Blair we had painted, and the Blair we know! Blair we had allowed our imagination to construct, to gild, to crown, is no more like the real Blair than Judas Iscariot is like what he should have been.

I have not space to go into the debt of the province as given by Mr. Blair while amongst us, but merely say in passing that if public works were constructed more with a view of saving the dollar than of buying votes, both for the representatives and from the representatives, much money might be saved. Take, for instance, in our own county, look at the different bridges, ask some questions as to the modes of construction, payments, &c., and you will readily understand me.

Then, again, the thousands in cash spent during the Leger election to make that individual popular, besides the legitimate expenses of the army of workers. Where did all the cash come from? and why did men who never before heard of Leger pay it? Now, Mr. Editor, I will carry you back to the canvas at the Leger election. Blair says, gentlemen, I have had no fair conception of your fine county, its beautiful soil, your industrious population, male and female. You have been wronged in the past. I promise you the end is near by. Send Mr. Leger to help me, and I promise you a fair representation in the councils of your country. You are entitled to three members, and shall have them before the next general election. Of course, I can do without Mr. Legere, and, if you don't want three members, don't send him, and I can assure you they will not be forced upon you.

Send Mr. Leger to help him!! Yes, we sent Leger to help him, but not, it seems, to get three members. Leger said, by his vote in the assembly, that Kent did not want three members. The question came up squarely in the house, and Blair, backed by Leger, said Kent did not want three members and would not have them. I think I am in a position to know that Blair said to Angus: Of course I ran you promising Kent three members, but it will never do to let Phinney take credit for getting them. Wait until next session, we will bring in the bill and pass it. Poor Angus! That next session did not come before the election, and when the opposition were warning the country to prepare for an election, saying Blair will not dare meet the house with the enormous deficit in public accounts until he get rid of the legislative body, and, if possible, secure some of them as his supporters. Legere was assuring his friends that Blair would not bring on the elections, as he never consulted me in the matter, and has he not promised me three members for Kent before election.

Poor Kent! Angus the Simple still believes in Blair, but when the house meets, should Blair still be driver, he'll find say to Angus—should Kent be foolish enough to again send him to represent her: Kent has declared she does not want three members. You voted in this legislature against three members: I sent you back to Kent and they ratified that vote. You may be willing to risk it, but I am not.

The question of re-distribution of members is a more difficult question than Mr. Leger comprehends, and while it was a nice bait for us poor electors of Kent County, it was only another of those "resources of civilization," that Andrew gloried in.

Blair would rather take the Kent County representative by the horns, look into his eyes kindly, talk pleasantly, lie to him, brag him if necessary, or do anything to keep him working quietly in the traces. He could not so cajole Phinney, who has about as much ability as Blair, and soon saw through his traps and schemes, and wisely avoided both.

Blair, in the Leger election, also said we were as far from direct taxation under his regime as we had ever been, and yet, the very next session, entered one of the most formidable looking wedges of the most approved shape, merely marking it "direct taxation," gave it a gentle tap remarking, stay there till I want you.

My letter is long enough, Mr. Editor, but I cannot close without a word on Phinney's taunt to the attorney-general that he would barter that office if in a tight place. It is well understood that he has since done so, but his mortgage was refused.

Most people dislike a coward, he ranks below the liar, if, indeed, all liars be not also cowards. Answer me, was it cowardly or brave calling on the elections, giving the shortest possible notice, when there was no emergency whatever. Was the object to have a full and fair expression of public opinion on the government of the day, and their mode of conducting the public affairs of the country? I should say not, rather that it was the mean advantage taken of their opponents and of the public, and I, for one, feel that I am in duty bound to vote against the man or men who can give such flimsy excuses for broken pledges and indecent haste, and in favor of men who have at least been straightforward and consistent in their course, and who, while I do not endorse all their acts, I can consider their errors as molehills beside the mountain. I say:

Vote for three members for Kent. Which means, vote for Phinney and Goggin.

Vote against direct taxation. Which means, vote for Phinney and Goggin.

Blair has been tried on both and found wanting, thus sustaining the record given of him by his opponents in the last contest.

Leger has been tried and found guilty of voting with Blair, against the most vital interests of his county—interests on which the electors were asked to vote.

Confession Came Too Late.

BANGOR, Me., Oct. 8th.—A dispatch from Eau Claire, Wis., the other day contained information that 10 years ago John Morgan was convicted of killing James M. Blashfield. Morgan served a term of four years for manslaughter in Waupun, protesting his innocence to the last. It was learned yesterday that a man who resided in this vicinity, and died a few months ago made a death bed confession to a clergyman, that he killed Blashfield with a stove lid, and Morgan was innocent. The name of the man is unknown.

John Morgan was a Bangor boy who went west, and had been there but a short time when arrested upon the charge mentioned. His father, Thomas Morgan of this city, believed in his son's innocence and with the aid of some of Bangor's influential citizens spared neither money nor effort to secure his acquittal. Visits were made to the West, but all to no purpose, and the father was prostrated in mind and body by the failure to prove his boy's innocence, and it led ultimately to his death.

Young Morgan's friends here made such urgent efforts in his behalf that he was not obliged to serve out his full term, but was pardoned, Chief Justice Peters aiding materially in the movement which brought about his release. He returned home and died several years ago, never having recovered from the disgrace. His mother and other relatives are still living in this city.

CARD.

To the Electors of Kent County:

GENTLEMEN:—At the request of a number of friends I have consented to offer myself as a candidate for the Local Legislature. It shall be my endeavor, if elected, to advance the interests of this county to the utmost of my ability, and believing that the present government is worthy of confidence, I shall if elected as one of your representatives, give them my support in all good measures.

Yours faithfully,
JAMES BARNES.

CARD!

To the Electors of the County of Kent:

GENTLEMEN:—The governor having dissolved the Provincial Legislature, it is again your duty and privilege to choose two representatives for the county in the House of Assembly, at the election to be held on the 22nd of this month.

Having been honored in September, 1891, with 2168 votes, I take this occasion to publicly thank you for the generous support then given me, and to appeal to my record since that time as a reason why the confidence you then so emphatically reposed in me should not be diminished.

I have kept the best interests of Kent constantly before me, and have honestly endeavored to advance them. My trips through the county have acquainted me with your local wants, and I have tried to the best of my ability to meet your requirements.

During the last year I have obtained over $6000 special grants for bridges on bye-roads, upwards of 20 bridges having in that time been constructed in the county. I mention this gratifying measure of success in this particular as a sample of the whole.

Believing that the present administration has merited the continued confidence of Kent and Kent's representatives, I will, if elected support the government, always, however, placing the interests of my county above the interests of party.

In the short time at my disposal, I will endeavor to meet as many of you as I can, and publicly explain my views on public questions more in detail. Trusting that I will again be honored with a majority of your votes, I am, gentlemen,

Your obedient servant,

AUGUSTE LEGER.
