

Bass River.

The hay and grain crops here are looking remarkably well, the frequent showers being favorable to growth.

The heavy rains of last Monday and Tuesday nights enabled our lumbermen whose drives were "hung up," to get their logs down to the mill.

A large audience assembled in the Orange Hall, Saturday night, to hear a lecture on "Dairy Farming," by Mr. Hubbard, of Toronto. Mr. H. spoke fluently in a manner which showed a thorough knowledge of the subject. He not only instructed, but interested and amused his audience. The lecturer closed his remarks at 10 o'clock amid rounds of applause, when all adjourned to their homes feeling that they had spent a profitable evening.

Mr. Daniel Dunlay lost a valuable horse last night, the animal catching its foot in the halter rope, and thereby strangling itself. ERIE.

Lines.

Written on the death of Minnie I. McKenzie, who died May 19, 1892, eldest daughter of A. J. W. McKenzie, of Bathurst, N. B., aged ten years.

Wherefore, oh, you friends of Jesus,
Throb your hearts with anguish wild,
Wherefore mourn your little Minnie,
Is she not an angel child?
Though you miss her from your circle,
"Though you see her face no more,
Yet remember little Minnie
Is not lost, but gone before.
You will miss her from the fireside,
For you never hear her speak,
And among the family circle
There will be one vacant seat.
You will miss her at the table,
Where she always took her place,
But you must not weep for Minnie,
She has joined a happier band.
She had a mother and brother in Heaven,
They will meet her at the gate,
And with them she will watch and wonder
Till you meet her, soon or late.
Oh, what a joyous meeting there,
When they all would meet,
To sing the songs of Jesus,
And walk the golden street.
Unto your Heavenly Father
Sends a message full of love,
I have taken little Minnie,
Strive to meet your child above.
Softly as the sun of summer
Sank beneath the glowing west,
In the arms of her Redeemer,
Sank your darling child to rest.
Underneath the elms we laid her,
She sleeps a sleep that knows no wake,
Her spirit rests at home with Jesus,
For her why then do you weep.
For what cause she was called away,
We do not know but mourn,
God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform.
Therefore, friends, cease from weeping,
And for Minnie weep no more,
Strive to win a crown of glory,
And meet her on a happier shore.
Strive to win the crown of glory,
That to faithful souls is given,
Run the race that's set before you,
For you have a friend in Heaven.

A Horse Jumps from a Flying Train.

Thursday a gray horse weighing about 950 pounds was a passenger on a freight train coming from the east. The animal was in a car with openings in each end 2x6 wide and 4x2 in depth. The doors were left open to give the animal air. By some means when the train was in rapid motion the horse got through the opening, cleared himself of the train, rolled down a steep embankment, jumped up and galloped off. The train was stopped, the horse caught and put in the car again and brought to Truro and was yesterday in Robt. McLeod's stables barring a few scratches and a little stiffness none the worse of its marvelous performance. How he horse got through the narrow opening and escaped the cars following the one it was in is a mystery.—Truro Sun.
