TO THE POOR HOUSE.

But, No! To a House Not Made With Hands.

The county house wagon drew up at the old farm house door in the early morning light, and the poor overseer got out and knocked on the door with the butt-end of his whip.

"Hay," quavered a thin voice from within, "who's there?"

"We've come for ye, mother," said the overseer.

"Who calls me 'mother?'" asked the tremulous voice, and then the door was opened by a shaky hand and an old woman, dressed in a shawl and hood stood in the doorway.

"I 'member," she said slowly, nodding towards the wagon, "it's the selectman, an' I s'pose they know best, but if Jim knew—if Jim knew—that his poor mother was goin' to the poorhouse it 'ud break his heart."

"Ar' ye ready mother?" asked the man gently.

"Yes I be. I ain't slept since I heard ye were comin' for me. It's all right, an' I don't blame ye, but it's hard to hev worked all yer life and raised a family, an' then die in the poorhouse. It'll almost kill Jim when he knows."

The man on the doorstep coughed and turned away, pretending to examine the visteria vine that blossomed over the door. Not for worlds would he have told her that he was only carrying out Jim's orders against the time he should bring his wife to the old farmhouse.

She came out slowly, looking with vague, wondering eyes on all that she was leaving; the trees that she and Harvey—that was her husband—had planted when they were young, at the bed of cinnamon pinks and lilac bushes at the gate. She stopped and gathered some of the fragrant southern-wood—old man they called it—and then she looked up at the window of one room—bridehood, wifehood, motherhood, angelhood that meant to her. Little Carrie had died there, Harvey had looked his last in the heaven of her eyes there. That was nigh unto 40 years ago. Why, where was God this fair summer morning that he had forgotten her, and let her go to the poorhouse.

"Hurry up, mother," said the man gently; "we're to call for another pauper—passenger a bit further down the road. 'Tain't much you're a-leavin'—with a short laugh. He was trying to make the best of it for her.

He helped her in the wagon, and in the golden light of another new day they moved on, jogging along the country road sweet with the scented life of nature, until they reached the style that led into the old graveyard where the sentinel stones shone among the trees in their strange dumb whiteness.

"Oh, ef you didn't mind—ef I just could say a word to Harvey—it would help me so much, an' I wouldn't be long—I wouldn't keep you waitin'."

"All right, mother." The overseer jumped out and helped her to the ground. "Don't be long; there's a good soul," and he lit his pipe and talked to the driver, apologizing for his weakness.

"'Tain't like as if she were a common pauper," he said; "there're folks here as remember when she was the belle of the county, and they do say that it is this son Jim that has run through with the property an' is gettin' her out of the way so he won't have to pay for her keep. I wouldn't tell her for a house and lot."

"She wouldn't believe yer ef yer did," said the driver, sententiously, "but she's takin' her time in yonder."

No. It was not time she was taking, but eternity. When the overseer went to look for her she lay with her withered cheek pressed to the moss-grown stone that bore the name of her husband, and with a smile that seemed to be reflected glory from Paradise lit up her peaceful face. It had come to her in one brief moment, the assurance that she would not go to the poorhouse, and then she had gone home.—Detroit Free Press.

The Attention of the Public

Is attracted by any new feature in newspaper advertising, but it must be strikingly novel if the advertisement is read a second time.

The display advertisements of retail merchants are artfully worded and appeal strongly to the economical housekeeper. Flat irons at seven cents and a Monday bargain sale in ribbons open the pocket books of the modern Mrs. Toodles.

The real estate agent with town lots for sale in an earthly Paradise, ten miles from the Court House, furnishes free transportation, a brass band and a free luncheon for prospective home seekers.

The railway companies do their share of contributing to the support of newspaper proprietors. Their time tables, showing arrivals and departures of trains are paid for in cash, or in tickets that will enable the editor and his best girl to ride on the trains.

One railway company will advertise that it is a "short line to Omaha," a competing line then positively states that it is "a shorter line to Omaha than any other," and now the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway insists that it is "the shortest line to Omaha" and proves it.

The Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co. also says that it is the best line to St. Paul and Minneapolis, "with electric lighted trains" and reading lamps in each berth so that one can read all night long if he has a book and don't want to sleep. It brags about the "finest dining cars in the world," with the best of meals served on imported china by the most expert and civil of colored waiters, at seventy-five cents, while the lines east of Chicago charge a whole dollar.

And—once more—the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway opens up a new through car line from Chicago to Denver, via Omaha and Lincoln, and it isn't long before the whole world says to itself that the "shortest line to Omaha," that "best line to St. Paul and Minneapolis," and that "new route to Denver," must be the only first-class railroad in the western part of the United States, and what the whole world says must be true.

All Coupon Ticket Agents in the United States and Canada sell tickets via the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul R'y.

For information concerning the line, time tables, etc., address A. J. Taylor, Canadian Passenger Agt., 4 Palmer House Block, Toronto, Ont.

The Bride Wouldn't Have it that Way.

A bashful and youthful bridal couple from the rural districts had a painful experience in Danbury circus day. The young husband wrote his own name and his wife's on separate lines of the hotel register, and the purblind clerk assigned them to separate rooms. Each waited for the other to set the matter straight, but it was only after a terribly lonesome hour that the bride plucked up her courage and her marriage certificate and decided to interview the clerk. She held out the document mutely, and the situation at last dawned upon him. The banished benedict was summoned from his seclusion and the curtain fell amid profuse apologies.

Among the remedies that do more than recommend Johnson's Anodyne Liniment stands first.

A Dangerous Knee Habit.

Another case is reported in which a woman has probably lamed herself for life through that habit so generally prevalent among women, the trick of shutting bureau drawers with the knee. It is so much easier to push a drawer to, even when it moves with difficulty, by a motion of the knee than it is to stoop that nine women out of ten perhaps are accustomed to do it. The instances in which evil results are of course not large in number in comparison to the number of persons who do this, but they are sufficiently numerous to show the folly of running the risk of harm and to deter thoughtful persons from exposing themselves to a danger so easily avoided yet of consequences so serious in many cases.

Got hay fever? Some say Johnson's Anodyne Liniment will cure it. Try it and report to us.

A Wonderful Operation.

Prof. Benedict, one of the great lights of medical science at the University of Vienna, had a patient suffering from epileptic fits. These fits, he had observed, began always with spasmodic twitchings of the right side of the face, from which part the spasms would spread to the arm, the shoulder, and soon over the body. From this fact the professor inferred that the seat of the disease was at the foot of the facial nerves. He took the patient to the operating rooms of the famous Prof. Billroth. There the skull of the patient was cut open, the affected parts of the brain were examined, and such parts as appeared morbid were removed. The wound healed rapidly and the patient has had no fits since.

Last year:

Her eyes were rheumy, and weak and red,

Her breath—you could smell it afar,

She has ringing and dizziness oft in her head,

And the cause of it all was catarrh.

This year—

Her breath is as sweet as the new meadow hay,

Her eyes are as bright as a star,

And the cause of the change she is ready to say,

Was the Dr. Sage Cure for Catarrh.

Rules for Stout Women.

Thou shalt not wear horizontal or diagonal lines, bright materials or a profusion of decoration.

Let your gown fit smoothly and have the full quota of seams, no matter what the fashion books say.

Let the skirt be long in front as well as at the back and have no border of strong contrast, as that detracts from the height.

Let it be as wide at the foot as possible, that the lines may slope out gradually from the waist. Trimmings carried up to the shoulder, high sleeves, high collars, bretelle effects, all have a tendency to increase the height.

Confine your selection to plain materials or those with narrow and not too pronounced vertical lines.—New York Sun.
