The band had returned on the track of the officer, but while he was seeking for an outlet, each head in this living necklace had unstrung itself, and dropped off so that, when he reached the end of the suspicious way, he could not descry one. They had carried out the chief's orders whom they obeyed and they had doubtless been charged to do nothing beyond facilitating his flight.

What occult power did this man of mystery exercise to command as well the vagabonds of Madrid as the artillerists of Somo Sierra? It was alarming, and a sub-lieutenant was not of the most stature to reduce the dangerous foe of the French to powerlessness.

He did not give up the hope of taking revenge, but he began to understand that success would not be his, unless he obtained the assistance of one more powerful, even if he had to sue the Emperor himself.

Forewarned, Napoleon would certainly take heed of this revolutionist who controlled unknown forces and might at some instant attack his person. And Napoleon would not refuse to take in hand the interests of the Empress' young ward, menaced by a kinsman who did not shrink from crime, to deprive her of her fortune.

Fontenay had acted clumsily in acting alone, when it was easy for him to have recourse to the intervention of the governor of Madrid instead of applying like a simpleton to the bank governor discarded by the French. The military authorities would soon have the confiscated books examined and traces found of the deposit made by Marguerite's dead uncle, the true one, of whom she was the sole heiress.

And a superior order would suffice for the other's arrest. The masters would have thought it a great matter to close the gates of Madrid for two days and, if need be, demolish a whole district to seize one of the heads of the insurrection. The belligerents acted more unscrupulously. On both sides there were the same furious massacres, and the most atrocious cruelty was permitted. Whoever commenced it, the other party had applied the lex talionis in all its rigor.

Though not savage, Paul Fontenay would not hesitate to have a dozen men shot, to destroy this implacable persecutor of his betrothed.

He did not amuse himself by continuing the fruitless researches, but, by walking straight forward without asking his way of the residents, who would have pretended not to understand him, he finally arrived at the Atocha gate, and thence, by following the deserted walks of the Prado, that of Alcalá, by which he had entered the city.

He had left his horse at the guard-house. The officer commanding the post informed him that Vergonecy had taken his, and might be at Chamartin since an hour before. The more than chilling reception of the gentler sex had greatly contributed to drive the lady-killing captain from Madrid, humbled in his conceit.

For other motives, Paul was in haste to regain head-quarters. He leaped into the saddle and crossed at a hand-gallop the mournful plain extending on the northwest of Madrid. He remarked an unaccustomed movement. The outposts were double, and detachments were falling back on Chamartin.

He longed to inquire the cause of this stir, but it is not correct, militarily, to put questions to the march with the troops, and he did not stop until he was at his house-door.

There he found Tournesol who said, shaking his head:
"It appears that all is going wrong, lieutenant. Everybody is on the move. The rumor is that we are going to decamp. I will not be sorry—I begin to pine in this hole."

Fontenay listened for no more. He tossed the bridle to his orderly and ran to head-quarters, where his brother-officers would certainly tell him what was going on.

The palace yard of the Dukes de l' Infantado, Napoleon's provisional residence, was crowded with dispatch-bearers ready for duty, and Paul had some difficulty in cleaving a passage to the room of the aide-camp, where he spied Vergonecy writing out an order.

"Great news, dear boy!" shouted the latter. "The English have landed at Ferrol in Galicia and are marching upon Madrid. The Emperor will start to-morrow to meet them and he takes all of us with him. Things are brightening up, we shall have some fun!"

"The English?" interrogated Fontenay, not in the current of European politics.

"Why, yes," returned Vergonecy. "They are coming to the help of their good old friends the Spanish."

"Their good old friends! how's that? I thought that at Trafalgar, three years ago, the English—"

"Oh, at Trafalgar the Spaniards were on our side and the English sunk their war-ships like our own. But all has changed since that time. They are now as thick as thieves in a fair—which ought not to astonish you, I think! for the French, and their sons, the English are the hereditary foes."

For sun burn, tan or rough hands, bathe with John-on's Anodyne Liniment at night; wonderful.

"Gee Whizz!"
N. Y. Herald: A man evidently a countryman, dashed up Park row in pursuit of a street car. He reached it, jumped on to the front platform and struck a well dressed young man twice in the face. The latter fell into the street, and the countryman following, striking him as he rose.

The young man succeeded in jumping on the rear platform of the car, and got behind the conductor, who held the aggressor when he tried to get at the passenger. The farmer only gave up the attempt when the conductors on two other cars insisted on holding him also.

The passenger jumped off and started on a dead run up Park row.

Then between his gasps the farmer gave the reason for his conduct.

"Gee whizz!" he gasped, "that's one of them bunco steers. Well he comes up to me and says: 'Why, Mister—I forget what it was he called me—how do do?' He see'd 'twan't no use and lights onter this car and me after him. That's all there is to it. Guess when he gets tired runnin' and gets time to think he'll reckon he made a mistake for once in his life."

The farmer pulled himself together, adjusted his hat and tried to lose himself in the crowd.

Habits of Salmon.

In their journey up the streams the first run of fish push on rapidly to the upper pools and head waters, one hundred miles or more, unless prevented by insurmountable falls, with which most of the Labrador streams are well provided. Here fish have been caught sixty miles above the estuary before one has been taken in tidal water. Some of the former remain in the lower pools, and are joined by others as the run progresses. Why is this? Have the fish any remembrance of where they spent their youthful days, and remain there whilst others pass them? It is now received as an undoubted fact that every fish knows its own river, but I will go further than that, and think every fish has a particular place in the river where it wishes to remain. Were all the salmon in the Restigouche to push on to its headwaters, would not the greater portion of the river be barren? The turmoil at spawning time on the restricted spawn beds, the turning over of the newly laid ova, could only end in wholesale destruction. Even under the present conditions I am satisfied not over ten per cent. of the eggs deposited naturally ever come to life. As to the speed at which they travel at times, "I caught two salmon with partly digested caplin in them quite recognizable, and these fish were caught sixty miles above where the caplin is known to come.—The American Angler.

People with delicate stomachs find Ayer's Sarsaparilla agreeable to the taste, and, therefore, prefer it as a blood-purifier to any other. This is one reason for its great popularity as a spring and family medicine. Safe, certain, and palatable.

It has transpired that William Turnbull, a member of the crew of the U. S. warship Baltimore, murdered by a Chilean mob at Valparaiso, was a Canadian. His father, Capt. Turnbull, resides in Prince Edward Island and has made a claim on the American government for compensation.

It is quite probable that you may need the services of a physician some day; but you can postpone the time indefinitely by keeping your blood pure and your system invigorated through the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Prevention is better than cure.

Judge Fraser has had his first divorce case. It came before him on Wednesday at Fredericton. The plaintiff is James S. Saunders, a Kings county farmer, who asks a divorce from his wife Mary on the statutory grounds, naming his brother-in-law, Isaac Humphreys, as co-respondent. Humphreys has left the country and the case is undefended.

Chas. Gilliat, of Boston, has entered suit against the Dominion government to recover $3,900 alleged to be due him for seizures made by the customs officials by which, if he gave information to enable the seizure of cargoes consigned to New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, he was to receive one-third of the amount.

The room in which a number of friends pass the evening smoking either cigars or inferior tobacco will have an unpleasant odor next morning. Let the same friends smoke only the "Myrtle Navy" and they will find quite a difference in the room next morning. If it is reasonably ventilated, as with a fire-place for instance, no unpleasantness whatever will be found. The purity and fine quality of the leaf used is the reason of this.

William Keith, late proprietor of the Havelock mineral springs, near Petitoctiac was found dead in his barn adjoining the spring property Wednesday morning. The indications are that he shot himself with a revolver.

The Cure For

Scrofula was once supposed to be the touch of royalty. To-day, many grateful people know that the "sovereign remedy" is Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This powerful alterative expirates "the evil" by thoroughly eliminating all the sturmountous poison from the blood. Consumption, catarrh, and various other physical as well as mental maladies, have their origin in

SCROFULA

When hereditary, this disease manifests itself in childhood by glandular swellings, running sores, swollen joints, and general feebleness of body. Administer Ayer's Sarsaparilla on appearance of the first symptoms. "My little girl was troubled with a painful scrofulous swelling under one of her arms. The physician being unable to effect a cure, I gave her one bottle of
