

The True Story of the Atlantic Cable.

The death of Mr. Cyrus West Field recalls a conflict of claims in which Canada is not a little interested. In the greater portion of this continent and in almost the whole of Europe, it is taken for granted that to Mr. Field is due the credit of originating the scheme of the trans-Atlantic cable. There is, however, fair evidence to prove that the honor of initiating the project should be conceded to a Canadian electrician, Mr. F. N. Gisborne, F. R. S. C. One of the witnesses to Mr. Gisborne's priority is the Rev. M. Harvey, of St. John's, Newfoundland, who, in his appendix to his text book of Newfoundland history clearly states that to Mr. Gisborne the conception is due. We have also seen a letter in which Mr. Harvey gives the same testimony. This testimony is especially valuable because Mr. Harvey (who has for a number of years been the Gazette's Newfoundland correspondent) was personally acquainted with Mr. Gisborne and a warm sympathizer with his plans when in the spring of 1853 he undertook to carry out the arrangements for which two years previously he had secured a charter from the Newfoundland Legislature. A letter to Mr. Gisborne, from the late Hon. Joseph Howe, dated from London, February 12, 1867, fully confirms what Mr. Harvey says on the subject.

Perhaps, as an account of the matter unfair to Mr. Gisborne has just been widely published in the natural desire to do honor to Mr. Field's memory, it may not be untimely to give the real facts:—After travelling extensively for several years, Mr. F. N. Gisborne, with his brother Hartley, settled in St. Eustache, P. Q., where they remained for nearly two years. At the end of that period (May, 1847) Mr. F. N. Gisborne entered the service of the Montreal Telegraph Company. After conducting a mission in the interests of telegraphy to the maritime provinces, he was made (1849-51) superintendent of the government lines at Halifax. Soon after his arrival at the latter city he strongly recommended the establishment of communication with Newfoundland, visited that island, obtained a thirty years telegraph construction charter, went to New York and obtained assurance of all required capital. In November, 1852, he laid under circumstances of great difficulty the first ocean cable on this side of the Atlantic, connecting Prince Edward Island with New Brunswick. While in 1852 he was engaged in constructing the land line across Newfoundland, the New York capitalists, disagreeing among themselves as to their respective interests in the undertaking, stopped payment, but the Newfoundland government, relying on Mr. Gisborne's assurances that he would reorganize the enterprise, generously paid his laborers' wages. In the winter (1853-54) Mr. Gisborne went again to New York, where, for the first time, he met Mr. Field, then in business in that city, but a total stranger to practical telegraphy. He was, however, much impressed with Mr. Gisborne's plans, and the upshot was that Cyrus Field and his brother, Dudley, the lawyer, returned with Mr. Gisborne to St. John's, and the Legislature, at the latter's request, cancelled the old and granted a new charter. Thus was formed the New York, Newfoundland and London Telegraph Company, comprising Peter Cooper, Moses Taylor, Marshall O. Roberts, Chandler White, Cyrus W. Field and Frederick Newton Gisborne. This last gentleman was appointed chief engineer, but, for reasons that he deemed sufficient, he resigned within a month, and Mr. Matthew Field took charge. Much money and time having been lost, Mr. Gisborne was asked to resume the chief engineering, and early in October, 1856, the line across Newfoundland was completed in such a way as to elicit a flattering testimonial from Mr. Cooper. Mr. Gisborne then undertook to proceed, with the late Mr. Field and the late Sir Edward Archibald to England to secure privileges and assistance for Eastern extension, but on reaching London becoming aware of Mr. Field's private negotiations with Mr. Brett touching the trans-Atlantic scheme, he, for this and other reasons, threw up his mission, and for a time abandoned telegraphy altogether.

The letter of Sir Joseph Howe already mentioned, is most distinct in attributing to Mr. Gisborne the first conception of the Atlantic cable. "I have reason to believe," he writes, "that you were the first pioneer of the enterprise, as well as the original promoter of electric telegraphy in the Maritime provinces." And, with regrets at not seeing his name among those who had been "rewarded for laying the Atlantic cable," he goes on to give his personal experience of Mr. Gisborne's services, leaving no doubt on the reader's mind that the latter was the "original pioneer and projector of this great work." The Rev. Mr. Harvey, F. R. S. C. S., is equally, if not still more emphatic in his testimony, deeming it but simple justice to Mr. Gisborne to set the public right to a point which is of no slight interest in the history of our age and of modern civilization. It is not the first time that Canada has been deprived of her due by more importunate suitors for recognition, but it is surely every Canadian's duty to bear witness on behalf of a fellow-citizen who has conferred benefits of his country and his kind.—Montreal Gazette.

The Power of Lightning.

On August 1, 1864, St. George's Church Leicester, which was a new building, was entirely destroyed during a thunder storm. The steeple having been burst asunder, parts of it were blown to a distance of thirty feet in every direction, while the vane rod at the top part of the spire fell perpendicularly down, carrying with them every floor in the tower, the bells and the works of the clock. The falling mass was not arrested until it arrived on the ground, under which was a strong brick arch, and this also was broken by the blow. The gutters and ridge covering were torn up, and the pipes used to convey water from the roof were blown to pieces. Mr. Highton calculated the power developed in the discharge of the lightning which destroyed the church with some known mechanical force. He discovered that a hundred tons of stone were blown down a distance of thirty feet in three seconds, and consequently a 12-220 horse power engine would have been required to resist the efforts of a single flash.

Death of F. X. Engler.

Nearly every person in southern California having a piano, knew F. X. Engler. He has been in San Bernardino for the past week or so giving his patrons his attention. Yesterday he was seated in front of the livery stable of Kenniston & Brazelton, when he commenced spitting up blood. He got up, and taking a broom, he cleaned up the blood that had come from him. He then spat up a little more and as he was about to seat himself again he dropped his handkerchief between his feet, and, stooping quickly, he grabbed the handkerchief and started back with his hand to his head, dropped into a chair and then forward, but was caught before falling by a bystander. A terrible hemorrhage followed and in a few minutes he choked to death. He was immediately taken into the undertaking parlors of McDonald & Son.

Mr. Engler's home is in Los Angeles, whence his wife will arrive this morning. Death comes when least expected.—San Bernardino Courier, July 2. [Many persons in Kingston and Richibucto will remember Mrs. Engler, nee Annie Wallace, who was a native of Kingston, and about twenty-five years ago, married for her first husband Captain Isaac Anker and sailed from this port in the vessel commanded by him. Captain Anker was lost at sea some years later, leaving the widow with a family of a son and daughter. The daughter is now married and lives Los Angeles, while the son who was a dentist and bid fair to gain eminence in his profession, died of consumption about a year ago. The residents of Kingston and Richibucto who so well remember Annie Wallace, cannot but deeply sympathize in her many sad and sudden bereavements.]

The Blarney Stone.

Five miles west of the city of Cork, Ireland, stands the little village of Blarney. It has a castle and in the walls of the castle the famous "Blarney Stone" is set. The stone is a part of the solid masonry, is 50 feet from the ground and about 20 feet below the projecting roof of the building. The situation of this talisman is such that the kissing of it is rather a dangerous feat, it being necessary to let the votary down over the walls by means of ropes. On the top of the castle there is a stone which many claim is the "true Blarney" because the feat of kissing is more easily accomplished. This spurious stone has been in its present situation only seventy years; the true Blarney, mentioned as being set in the wall, bears date of the building of the castle, which is 1446.
