A Very Mournful Ballad. "Li Hung Chang has the grip."—Daily papers.

In the blossoming land of the broad Hwang-Ho, Where the soft, celestial pig-tails hang, The royal household is struck with woe— The influenza got Hung Chang.

Hung Chang, viceroy of the sun and moon And various astral real estate, Is weezing like a cracked bassoon— Like a merely earthen potentate.

For many days must Li Hung lie low, While pagoda doctors give things to him And pray to the joss at his bangal-ow, Or put him into laths and stow him.

The viceregal temper is in a glow, No mortal may go near Hung Chang, And the bulk of the natives are lying low— Lest the bulk of the natives are forced to hang.

O, son of the sun, and the crescent moon, And Jay Gould of the rest of the space; You're in for it now! each night and noon You shall sneeze and sneeze till you're red in the face.

Like the Yang-tze-Kiang your eyes will run, While other floods from your eyelids drip; O, What better lot of a son of the sun If the son of a gun has got the grip? —Eugene Field.

Pious Smiles. Rosalie—Going to give up anything this Lent? Grace—I guess I'll give up Tom. Rosalie—Pshaw, that's giving up absolutely nothing.—New York Herald.

"I am not opposed to Sunday rest," said a workman who is a free-thinker, "but what I demand is that the other days of the week shall be treated in the same way."—Le Figaro.

When a little girl in a Sunday-school choir wants to be an angel all she has to do is to sing out. The idea that wings make the angel is merely a matter of opinion.—Pica-yune.

Preacher—Every man must some day settle his account with his Maker. Tailor—I wish you could impress young Sappington with that idea. He hasn't settled with me in about a year and a half.—Boston Courier.

First Parishioner—I think we ought to raise Dr. Thirdly's salary. Second Parishioner—I don't. He is such a conscientious man that he would feel bound to preach longer sermons.—Kate Field's Washington.

De recordin' angel won't hab to work nights, deah breddern, putting down de good deeds ob de folks dat keep Lent just because it's fashionable an' because dey am afraid dat if dey doan keep it dey won't be in de swim.—The Rev. Plink Plunk.

Seeker—I observe that Prof. Staggs has been lecturing on "How to Become a Christian Athlete." I wonder what that means. Sageman—That's an easy one. A Christian athlete is one who is continually jumping from one religious faith to another.—Boston Courier.

She (after the service)—You dreadful fellow! Why did you smile during the offertory? He—I couldn't help it. There was Miss Addie Pose singing, "Had I the Wings of a Dove." The mental picture of a twelve-stoner trying to fly with a pair of four-inch wings was too much for me.—Pearson's Weekly.

One of the city's prominent life-insurance agents has a bright boy. One day in Sunday-school the little fellow's teacher was telling her class about Daniel in the lions' den. Tommy listened attentively and finally burst forth with: "Did Daniel's children get his life insurance when he was eaten up?" This "broke up" the class.—Boston Herald.

The Meanest Man. A well-known gentleman in this city moved into a house that had been previously occupied by another gentleman who was a subscriber to one of the evening papers, says the Chattanooga Times. The carrier, of course, continued leaving the paper for a space of a year, never having been notified of the change.

The collector recently went to collect for the paper, the bill being made out in the name of the gentleman who had subscribed. When the collector presented the bill the gentleman of the house said: "Why, my dear sir, that man has not lived here for over a year. You are at the wrong house."

"Well, has not the carrier been leaving you a copy of the paper all the time?" "Yes, sir. But I did not subscribe, and I told the boy to quit leaving it, but he never did so."

"You have received the paper every day, haven't you?" "Yes, sir." "Then you ought to pay for it." "Well, excuse me for a moment," and the gentleman went into the house. Returning in a moment he lugged out a stack of newspapers half as tall as himself. "Here are your papers, sir; I have no use for them."
