Irish Home Rule.

LONDON, Jan. 2.—Notwithstanding the tempt at entire secrecy in connection with the Home Rule bill, a correspondent has succeeded in getting, on excellent authority, at some of the details. The bill provides restrictions for the Irish Legislature which if faithfully enforced, will make impossible that separation from the British Crown which Unionists affect to fear. The Irish Legislature will have no authority whatever to make any law relating to the status or dignity of the Crown, or the succession to the Crown or a Regency; the making of peace or war, the army, the navy, militia, volunteers, or the military or naval forces, or the defence of the realm. In these respects the authority of the proposed Irish Parliament will be very inferior to that of the former Irish Parliament, which raised volunteers for home protection, and raised and equipped, or voted to equip, regiments for foreign service.

The prohibition against volunteers will, it is expected, be very distasteful to the Irish leaders. It is not believed, however, that a bill permitting the formation of an Irish army in the guise of volunteers could pass the British Parliament. The Irish Parliament will be given, however, the control of the constabulary, and this has proved in the past to be at least as efficient as regular troops in dealing with disturbances. The Irish Parliament will also be prohibited from passing any law on the subject of treason or naturalization, trade, navigation or quarantine, so that its powers will be thoroughly limited to local affairs.

In order to dispose of the objections raised by the Ulster Royalists, so called, who have asserted that the Irish Parliament would discriminate in favor of the Roman Catholic religion, the Irish Parliament will be strictly prohibited from passing any law whatever respecting the establishment or endowment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or imposing any disability, or conferring any privileges, on account of religious belief; or abrogating or derogating from the right to establish or maintain any place of denominational education or any denominational institution or charity, or prejudicially affecting the right of any child to attend a school receiving public money without attending the religious instruction at the school. It will thus be seen that any attempt on the part of the Parliament, either directly or indirectly, to give the members of one church preference over another, or over people who are members of no church at all, is thoroughly prevented.

Another point of interest is that the Irish Parliament will have no power to impose customs or excise duties. In this respect also the powers of the Irish Legislature will be considerably inferior to those of colonial parliaments. It will be impossible to enact any law for the protection of Irish as against British or other industries. These are known to be salient points in Mr. Gladstone's Home Rule measure.

A New Years Parade.

The chief attraction about town yesterday afternoon was the grand march of the Hawker Medicine Co.'s procession. Headed by the Kingsville band, thirty-five carts, with three outriders on horseback, bedecked in gorgeous apparel that would have made a gipsy cowboy green with envy, paraded the principal streets by the route outlined in yesterday's Sun. Each horse wore a black blanket, on which was set forth in big white letters the virtues of Hawker's medicines; and Hugh McLellan, who rode in the vanguard and shared the equestrian glories of the occasion with Chris Nichols and Chas. Myers, was literally plastered over with allusions to Hawker's tonic and Hawker's pills. It was the biggest "ad" the city has seen for many a day. After the procession the gay cartmen and frisky horsemen adjourned to Mitchell's cafe, where a genuine New Year's lay-out was awaiting them, and to which the fullest justice was meted out. Later in the evening the members of the band, with William and Samuel Hawker, David Russell and a number of invited guests, including representatives of the press, numbering altogether some 40 or 50 persons, sat down and spent a couple of hours together over a supper in Mitchell's best style. The principal speaker of the evening was William Hawker, who among other things noted that this was the starting point of the new company, and the coincidence that the house wherein they sat was the old home of that famous medicine man, Hon. Jas. I. Fellows. Mr. Hawker makes puns as well as pills, and his observations that they started out with Russell and the wings of success over them and with Troops of friends around them was greeted with hearty laughter. Mr. Russell made an able speech relative to the Hawker Cures and prospects, and there were other speeches, songs, choruses and music by the band. Mr. McLellan danced the Highland fling. There were cheers for Mr. Hawker, Mr. Russell, and the band. The party broke up about ten o'clock, to come in and find the opposite sidewalk lined with people attracted by the music of the band and the singers. Yesterday was a great day for the Hawker Medicine Co.—Sun.

Appenaed for a Time.

"Travel on this road pretty often?" "Yes," replied the sleepy-looking passenger on the same seat. "Come to town most every day, I reckon?" "Yes." "In business of some kind, like as not?" "No; I work for another man." "Drygoods business?" "No. Wet goods." "Saloon?" "No. Fish market." The inquisitive passenger was quiet a moment. Then he came at him again. "Find it cheaper to live out of the city?" "No. Dearer." "Rents are cheaper, ain't they?" "Yes." "Groceries and things don't cost any more, do they?" "No. Cost less." "Have to pay much for railroad fare?" "Railroad fare doesn't cost me $75 a year." "Then what makes it dearer?" "Running for trains. Wear and tear of shoe leather." The long-nosed man ruminated on this a few moments and then said: "They pay bigger wages in the city than they do in the suburbs, don't they?" "Yes." "What might it be worth, now, to hold a job like yours?" "The man I'm working for pays me $20.99 a week." "Always make the exact change?" "Always." "What's the idea of makin' it just $20.99?" "He pays me $20 for my work and the 99 cents for minding my own business." And the sharp nosed man went to the other end of the car and took a seat on the coal-box.—Chicago Tribune.

How Long to Keep a Cow.

In the Practical Farmer, Prof. Henry Stewart says: "I doubt if it pays to keep a cow after eight years unless it be for her calves, for the milking qualities certainly depreciate at that age, when she has passed her best. But as the calves are an important part of the income of a cow it may pay to keep the best of the old cows on this account, although my experience has been that old cows do not retain their yield of milk so long as the young ones." It is the custom in Holland to dispose of all cows at the end of eight years. This is because they are yet good for beef, which seems to be the destiny of all bovine animals in that country. So far as milk and butter are concerned, most well kept cows are good until they are twelve years old, and often do well until they are fourteen. But this of course greatly detracts from their value for beef. In Chicago, and probably elsewhere, there is a demand for this poor old cow beef to can. It is less trouble to separate it from the fat, which is not desirable for canning purposes, and it can be bought cheaper than young beef. Extra cooking makes it tender. It may be just as nutritious and clean as young beef, but it would not sell well from the butcher's block.

What the Eskimos Eat.

The trip of the group of Eskimos recently landed in Boston on the way to the World's fair was uneventful, except for the difficulty experienced in providing satisfactory food for the Eskimos. They would not eat cooked articles of any sort, and soon became tired of the sun dried seal meat, venison and fish, with which the ship's larder was bountifully provided. In this emergency the head of the family of English speaking Eskimos suggested trailing lines for fish, and soon the whole party made a good catch, which they ate raw. During the remainder of the voyage the passengers spent a portion of each day in fishing this being their only pleasure. The Evelena arrived at Port Hawkesburg on Oct. 3 and put in there for provisions. A barrel of cabbage was brought and opened on the deck. Within fifteen minutes every bit of the contents of that barrel had disappeared, the passengers having eaten all parts of the vegetable. Some apples were offered to them. They tasted the fruit, but it was not to their liking, and they have not since accepted any. Raw potatoes and raw turnips are eaten with a relish.—New York Tribune.

Their Mothers Were Friends.

Two fair haired urchins of six or thereabouts were seated in an elevated train one day last week. A stylishly dressed young lady sat in the opposite seat. Turning to one of the youngsters she remarked:—"What is your name, little boy?" "Harold, mum," he replied. "And yours, dear?" she asked addressing the other. "Oh, my name's Godfrey," said the other little fellow with some show of pride. "Why, what pretty names!" exclaimed the young lady. "And you look so much alike. You are brothers, of course?" "Oh, no, mam," spoke up Harold; our mothers is only friends."
