MR. PHINNEY'S SPEECH
On the Bathurst School Debate.

iron clad, non-sectarian section as a menace to the spiritual welfare of their children and their denominational integrity. I am not here to condemn or approve their course and will not stop to discuss that feature of the question. I speak of facts as we found them. Well, sir, the agitation grew and extended and all good citizens began to feel the unpleasantness and discomfort of the strained relations that were engendered. It was therefore with great satisfaction that the basis of agreement or modus vivendi adopted in 1875, was hailed in our county. Consequent thereon our R. Catholic fellow citizens abandoned their opposition school districts were organized, school houses built, and people began to work in harmony and all felt the benefits derived from the operation of the law, more particularly the French people who had largely profited by the free school system.

Now, sir, I assert, and I don't think the proposition can be successfully contradicted, that these regulations adopted in 1875, were from a logical and consistent point of view, a clear and undoubted departure from the hard and fast non-sectarian features of the school law. Had they not been, there would not have been any necessity for them, in order to make the operation of the law acceptable to its former opponents. I do not propose at present to argue that point further, but, entertaining that opinion, I cannot accede to the proposition enunciated in the last clause of the resolution just moved by the Attorney General. While I say this I am prepared, with my experience in the county of Kent to assert that the regulations were a wise and statesmanlike act, creditable to all concerned, calculated to be successful in promoting harmony and good will, amongst Catholics and Protestants on the school question, and on this ground if on no other, were a justifiable departure from the rigid interpretation that had up to that date been placed upon the law, and until some argument more potential and convincing than I have yet heard, is advanced to justify their repeal, I for one cannot assent to the repeal or abandonment of that basis of argument. In the interest of Catholics and Protestants alike it must be adhered to. Neither can afford to recede from it. On this point I stand firm, and wish my opinion distinctly understood. I think that the Petitioners are mistaken in their views on this point if on no other, and they have not fully apprehended the grave results that would in my opinion follow a departure from the solemn compact then entered into and under which until the present difficulties arose, all had continued to work in harmony. Working under the provisions of this regulation and under the supervision of the law, we have convent schools at Buctouche and St. Louis, which have for years been doing good educational work and which no Protestant has ever asked to be interfered with. The clergyman (Rev. Fathers Michaud and Richard) who founded and supervised these schools are gentlemen of recognized business ability and administrative skill and in this respect will pretty thoroughly answer the slur put upon the clergy as a body by Mr. Blair when he characterized them as men not generally possessed of calm and reflective judgement and business ability.

Now, sir, as I have said, I desire to plant myself firmly on the ground with respect to the compact of 1875. It may be that the application of the regulation in small centres may be either impossible or attended with serious difficulties but with that at present I do not feel called upon to deal. How far subsequent regulations have widened the basis I am not prepared to say, as I have not yet had an opportunity of examining the returns brought down, but while I would rather express the opinion that no objection can fairly be taken to them on this ground, I can not resist the conclusion that because of the agitation in connection with the difficulty at Bathurst the regulation since adopted has been the outcome of political manoeuvring, inasmuch as we find it conclusively established that that regulation was passed just prior to the election in Queen's county, made to do duty there, published in the manual which was then going through the press, and, after that contest was over, and the attorney general elected the rider was put on the regulation and a new edition of the manual published. If that does not indicate political scheming behind the business, I do not know what it does indicate.

Now sir, let me refer for a moment to the trouble at Bathurst out of which the present difficulties have arisen. I do not claim to have by any means, an accurate knowledge of all the local circumstances. I have not followed very closely the news paper controversy, nor have I been able to look carefully into the official correspondence, the reading of which at the clerk's desk has been little better than a legislative farce, so far as proving of service to the House. But I am strongly impressed with the belief that the course pursued by the government has not tended to the satisfactory adjustment of the difficulty. It is a very unfortunate circumstance that several of the gentlemen whose names have been more prominently mentioned in connection with the Bathurst schools, are strongly impressed with the belief that they have been treated by the government with studied discourtesy, and that the attorney general while speaking of the clergy generally in no complimentary terms, has deemed it necessary for his argument to single out as objects of his sarcasm, ridicule and abuse these clergymen, Rev. Mr. Thompson, Sellar and Allen. With Mr. Thompson I have no personal acquaintance, but he is a respected minister of the Presbyterian church, who stands well in his presbytery, and I would hesitate, on the mere statement of the attorney general to regard him as a man utterly unworthy of credence, and actuated by base and ignoble motives. Those who are intimately acquainted with the gentleman, resent with indignation the attorney general's attack on him. With Mr. Sellar and Allen I enjoy a personal acquaintance, and in my opinion neither of them is the stamp of men of which agitators and bigots are made. Mr. Allen I am informed never at any time took a prominent part in the Bathurst trouble. He was it is true, a member of a committee of citizens selected with reference to the matter. That committee was not communicated with or advised of the visit of the government to Bathurst and when at the last moment Mr. Allen did receive a notice from Mr. Blair, of a meeting then being held at the Keary House, he did not deem it consistent with his principles or his feelings to accept the invitation under these circumstances.

So far as Mr. Pitts is concerned, I am not here to justify but to condemn his circulars and extreme language. In my opinion they are calculated to do serious harm, if taken seriously in this country. We want no religious animosities aroused in the province. But Mr. Pitts is open to censure what about Mr. Labllois who holds a seat in the government, and from whose firebrand appeals on denominational lines, the government profited in the Kent election of 1891? The attorney general, with noisy denunciation, condemns Mr. Pitts, but butts his bosom and makes a member of his cabinet, the man of whose shady reputation he is fully aware, and commissions him to stir up religious discord in Kent, and fire the heart of his compatriots there against his brother Catholic Mr. Goggin, a man, who in respect of honor and integrity is ten-fold his superior. Such is consistency in the opinion of the leader of the present government.

Having thus expressed my opinion sir, it is needless for me to add that I cannot vote for the resolution offered by the Attorney General, but I am prepared to vote for an amendment which will later in the debate be moved, affirming the compact of 1875, but omitting the unfounded and unjustifiable allegations contained in the present resolution.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—A sad and fatal accident happened to Ernest, the ten year old son of Thomas G. Dickinson, at Kingston Friday morning. The little fellow got up early in the morning, and with nothing on but his night clothes, proceeded to light the fire. His clothing accidentally caught fire and in a few moments he was in a sheet of flames. His father hearing his cries rushed to his assistance and succeeded in tearing off the burning clothing, but not before the boy's body had been badly burned. Dr. Ferguson was hastily summoned but could do nothing to save his life, and he died Sunday after much suffering. Deceased was a bright little fellow, and a general favorite around Kingston. The funeral which took place Tuesday, was attended by the pupils of the Kingston schools in procession. Much sympathy is felt for the bereaved family. Mr. Dickinson had his hands badly burned in tearing off the burning clothing.

RAISING A SUNKEN SCHOONER.—The schooner Morning Light, owned by Captain Sutton, lying at Brail's wharf, Kingston, met with an accident when the ice began to break up a few days ago. The rudder of the vessel got in a crack in the ice and she was thrown in such a position that her bow was forced under water. The water ran in through her port hole, and she filled and sank. With the aid of Captain Malley's schooner, she was brought to the surface, pumped out, and is now as light and staunch as ever.
