

Feed Your Land.

In Ontario there are few farmers that raise enough barnyard manure to keep their farms up, still less to improve the condition of the soil. This is an acknowledged fact. Yet, how many farmers are there that know this, and still do not try any other way of manuring their land.

Every farmer should be very careful to see that his land is improving in quality. As there are so many ways of enriching the soil, there is no reason why our farm lands should fail in raising good crops. Clover should be sown more than it is. A good crop of clover plowed under in June, the land worked thoroughly on top till the end of August, then let it be unplowed, and it will be in first rate order for wheat, and on light land especially it will raise just as good a sample, and as much, if not more, grain to the acre than on a bare summerfallow with a good coating of barnyard manure.

For oats, a second crop of clover can be plowed under to advantage. Cut the first crop of clover as soon as possible, so as to let the second crop get a good start. Some farmers sow land plaster after the first crop has been taken off, so as to make the second crop as heavy as possible, which is a good plan. Even if clover is not plowed under it leaves the land richer, as it draws so much nitrogen into the soil. As clover is a high price now, no doubt many farmers will not sow much, if any; but even if it cost ten dollars a bushel and you sow say twelve pounds to the acre and plow it under, it is really very cheap for manure as the twelve pounds you sow to the acre only cost two dollars, and then there is so very little work connected with it.

Then, there are wood ashes. Ashes should be kept under cover, and will be found very beneficial to wheat, peas, grasses, potatoes, etc., especially on light land, as they contain potash.

Then, again, there are fertilizers, such as bone, and potash, nitrate of soda (which comes from South America), Peruvian guano (which is the excrementitious deposit of certain sea fowl, which is found on the coast of Peru and islands off the coast). No doubt soluble fertilizers, if properly applied, are a great help to the crop; but, as the prices are so high, great care must be taken, for although more grain may be raised where the fertilizer has been applied, yet it is quite possible that there will not be a sufficient increase in the yield of the crop to pay for the outlay on the fertilizer. I would advise farmers most certainly to try some fertilizer, but on a small scale at first, and then if they are found to be a paying investment continue to apply them in larger quantities. I have used nitrate of soda on light land to advantage. One thing is very important, and that is, do not sow a fertilizer unless your land is clean. It would be well also if land was well worked and free from foul weeds before manure of any kind be applied.

In conclusion, I would recommend all who go in for mixed farming to feed all their coarse grain, and not sell hay, straw or turnips. The adage is very true: "Feed your land, and it will feed you." Farmers Advocate.

Guard Against Cholera.

Keep the blood pure, the stomach in good working order, and the entire system free from morbid affected matter by using Burdock Blood Bitters, which cleanses, strengthens and tones the whole system. Cholera cannot attack the healthy.

Unduly Forcing Young Pigs.

We are frequently reminded of the evils of unduly forcing young cattle in the early stages of growth, but we seldom find a word cautioning feeders against pushing on young pigs too rapidly at the start by feeding them an over-stimulating food. And yet there is as much danger in the one case as in the other. The high prices paid for pork during the past winter have made the temptation to overfeed particularly strong, in the hope of getting the pigs ready for the market at the earliest possible age. In the effort to push them on thus, the object in so doing has been defeated. The animals have become unduly fat at an early age, and the power to develop has so far been reduced. When such a condition is reached in the development of the animal, it cannot be put upon the market too soon for profitable development will not take place at a later season. All the food fed afterwards will not produce gains equal to those which have been obtained previously, or which would have been obtained had the feeding been properly done. If we wish young pigs to develop until they reach a certain age, we must feed them with this object in view. We must not push them by feeding such carbonaceous foods as corn and peas, except in small quantities; and then when the age has been reached at which fat is to be produced more than muscle, we can, of course, feed them these grains with much freedom.—Ex.

Big Smuggling Operation.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., May 5.—Mr. Eugene Leroux was arrested here last night while passing diamond jewelry. Later his husband was also locked up. Eighty thousand dollars' worth of diamond rings and bracelets, supposed to have been smuggled into this country were found in their apartments.

Would Have Sun of It.

City of Mexico special: There is considerable excitement among the Catholics of this city over the alleged activity of the Government authorities in forcibly detaining Miss Jesus Lopez, a young lady and daughter of a prominent merchant, who left here for Lafayette, La., where she was to enter a convent as a nun. The reform laws of Mexico prohibit convents and no woman is allowed to take the veil. Miss Lopez, however, desired to enter a convent in the United States, and her wishes were acceded to by her parents. She left here via the Mexican National Road and had gotten as far as Saltillo, over 900 miles north of this city, when the train was boarded by a police officer, who took the lady off, and accompanied her back to the City of Mexico. The authorities here claim that the brothers of the young lady were opposed to her entering a convent and ordered her detention, but Catholics claim that the arrest was made upon orders of the Government authorities on the ground that the prisoner was attempting to violate the reform laws.

Clean Pig.

Says a writer for The Stockman: "Did you ever eat a piece of clean pig? my friend asked yesterday. And then she went on to tell how a grain dealer in North Dakota had raised two clean pigs for his own eating, but in a fit of generosity had sent one here to his friends. 'I had the pleasure of eating a piece,' she said 'and from the taste, would never have guessed it was pork. It was quite fat, but the lean tasted something like a piece of chicken.' The producer had moved the pigs to a clean pen every two days and had permitted them to eat nothing but clean sweet milk and wheat. Now this little incident accords so perfectly with my pet theory in regard to swine that I am moved to air said theory again. Instead of the clean pig being the exception it should be the rule. Give your swine the same care and chance you do your bees, and see what the result will be.—Ex.

A Fascinating Game With Figures.

A fascinating game by which I have whiled away many a pleasant hour is the following: It is played with an antagonist, each in turn placing a number on paper from one to six, adding them up mentally as they proceed. The person who succeeds in placing the last figure, which shall make the column add up 30, wins the game.

The player unacquainted with the secret always loses. The explanation involves No. 9. Your friend has written say, 6. You put down, say 3, which will add up 9. Your friend puts down, say, 1. You put down 6, for the second addition must equal 7. Again, he puts down, say, 5. You make it 7 by adding 2. He puts down, say 3. You again make it 7 by putting 4. The addition foots 30, and as you have put down the last figure you have won. Be careful to make the first addition 9 and the following three 7 each, and victory will never desert you.—Philadelphia Times.

Nervous Collapse in Parliament.

Instances of nervous collapse in the house of commons have been by no means scarce. The late Lord Sherbrooke—then Mr. Robert Lowe—completely broke down in the course of a speech in the debate upon the royal titles bill. Happening to confuse his notes, he became bewildered and sat down in the very middle of his speech. If I remember correctly, he never addressed the house again after this collapse. The celebrated Lord Stanford when Mr. Smythe—on one occasion stumbled over the pronunciation of an intricate word, and losing his nerve was compelled to sit down.

Sir George Grey, who was home secretary under Lord Palmerston, was a positive martyr to nervousness, and he never addressed the house, even upon the most unimportant occasions, without betraying evident signs of this affliction. Another instance is that of Mr. John Sturt Mill, who upon a famous occasion utterly collapsed.—London Truth.

Railway Passengers Robbed.

PARSONS, Kansas, May 3.—A Missouri, Kansas and Texas R. R. passenger train was held up at Briar Creek, Indian Territory, last night, by six armed men supposed to be members of the notorious "Harry Starr" gang. The express messenger refused to divulge the combination of the safe, though a revolver was held at his head and a knife at his throat. The robbers relieved all passengers of their money and jewelry and escaped. A large number of prominent railroad men were on the train.

Why He Took the Bucket.

The captain of a large steamer was once filling up his crew for a long voyage, when a seaman came up and said: "I want to sail with you, sir." "All right, my man," said the captain, "and where have you sailed before?" "P. and O., sir to Australia." "What countryman?" "An Irishman," was the ready response.

"Well, you must get a character." The discharge was obtained, and, as the Irishman was presenting it, another seaman came up and said he wanted to join. "What line were you on before?" "Canard, sir."

"What countryman?" "English, your honour." "All right, go forward."

Shortly after, as the two were swilling the decks in a heavy sea the Englishman was swept overboard bucket and all. "Unmoved, Paddy finished his job, and then went to the captain's cabin.

"Come in," responded the officer to his rap. "What's up now?" "You mind Bill Wilkins, the Englishman and Canard?" queried Pat.

"Yes, surely, my man." "You took him without a character?" "I believe so; what of that?" "Well, he's gone off wid your bucket."

A Sad Telegraphic Blunder.

A certain member of Parliament, as proud and fond as a man should be of his beautiful young wife, was just about rising to speak in a debate, when a telegram was put in his hands. He read it left the House, jumped into a cab, drove to Charing Cross and took the train to Dover. Next day he returned home, rushed into his wife's room, and, finding her there, upbraided the astonished lady in no measured terms. She protested her ignorance of having done anything to offend him. "Then what did you mean by your telegram?" he asked. "Mean? What I said of course. What are you talking about?" "Read it for yourself," said he. She read: "I flee with Mr. X. to Dover—straight. Pray for me." For the moment words would not come; then after a merry fit of laughter, the suspected wife quietly remarked: "Oh, those dreadful telegraph people! No wonder you are out of your mind, dear. I telegraphed simply: 'I tea with Mrs. X. in Denver street. Stay for me.'—London Tid Bits

Owned the Train.

CARIBOU, Me., April 29.—When Conductor Dolt's train from New Brunswick arrived here to-day it looked as if it had run through a cyclone. The noise that issued from its cars was like the raging of a hundred caged beasts, and the pale faces of the passengers would seem to give verity of the assumption.

Blood was noticeable in the interior of the cars, and it was still flowing where the mob of 200 rum-crazed river drivers howled and shrieked and swore as they kicked and clawed, pounded and bit each other, the wildest collection of insane humanity ever seen in these parts.

After leaving Aroostook Junction fighting began in a dozen places at once. The women on board the train were compelled to seek safety in the baggage car behind locked doors. The river men fought in pairs and squads. They kicked and gouged and bit, and when victims fell to the floor the calked shoes of their companions were planted forcibly into their faces and on their persons, and the victims wild shrieks of anguish would be drowned again by the roar of the mob.

Two of the men were mortally wounded, it is thought.

An Unholy Peter.

A short time ago, says the Konigsberger Allgemeine Zeitung, there died in the neighborhood of Konigsberg a worthy man. Soon after his death his widow was met one evening by a person dressed in a long white garb, his face partly hidden by a mask. He said his name was "Peter—Holy Peter;" that he had been sent by her husband for 1,000 marks—otherwise his many sins prevented him from entering the realms of eternal bliss. The frightened widow tremblingly assured the "Holy Peter" that she had but sixty marks in the house. Would he call the next day? She would in the meantime go to the bank and get the balance. At the bank the next day the official was surprised she should want to withdraw so large an amount and told her so. The widow told him the reason, and retired. The official forthwith communicated with the police. In the evening "Peter" again appeared in the same costume, and while in the act of removing the balance of the thousand marks was suddenly pounced upon by two police officers. With the query, "Do they really want money in heaven?" the mask was torn from Peter's face. The rascal was discovered to be the landlord of the widow.

An Intermittent Business.

A mother tells the following story on her two young children. At the time she was not at home, and the nurse, in order to insure a peaceful retirement of the tots, allowed them to take a small lunch to their room. They knelt down, as is their nightly custom, and all was still, as became the solemnity of the occasion, when one of the early beads was raised, and a startling announcement was made: "Mr. Lord, please excuse me a minute, Kit's takin' a bite of my pickle." After a short but decisive engagement devotions were resumed.—Cincinnati Enquirer.
