MAYOR SHOT DEAD.

Chicago's Chief Magistrate Dies at the Hands of an Insane Assassin.

CHICAGO, Oct. 29.—At seven o'clock Saturday night, Patrick Eugene Prendergast rung the bell at the residence of Mayor Harrison. When the servant opened the door Prendergast asked for Mr. Harrison, who went to the door. The man drew a revolver and fired a shot, entering the mayor's abdomen. Two more shots were fired. The first entered the mayor's body under the left arm. Mr. Harrison, when the first shot was fired, had started toward the door. The second shot struck him when within a few feet of the assassin. Mr. Harrison was so close the muzzle of the revolver when the third shot was fired that the bullet shattered one of the knuckles of his left hand and the powder burned his flesh.

Mr. Harrison died in a few minutes. Prendergast delivered himself up to the police at the police station. He undoubtedly is insane. He says Harrison promised him an office, and he shot him because he had not kept his promise.

An inquest was held this morning. The verdict recommended that Prendergast be held for murder until discharged by due process of law. The verdict is the basis of mittimus for the detention of Prendergast.

According to the post mortem examination five bullet wounds were made, and three bullets remained in the body. One lodged in the muscles of the back, another passed through the liver and was found in the bowels; a third struck near the shoulder, ranging downward and lodged near the skin.

Argus—"After the Ball."

MR. EDITOR:—In a letter to THE REVIEW of the 18th inst., the writer of this, over the signature of "Argus," had occasion to rebuke a young man who, in a letter to the Plain Dealer of the 14th inst., over the signature of "After the Ball," had gratuitously and wantonly assailed, in gross language and low epithet, a number of the respectable citizens of Richibucto and vicinity. "Argus" warned him if he repeated the gross offence his name would be given to the public. The warning still hangs. (See "Argus" in REVIEW of 18th inst.)

Since "Argus" was printed a literary syndicate (see Plain Dealer of 28th inst.) has been organized and launched on the public by the baptismal name of "After the Ball Co." For the rebuke and warning given by "Argus" to the young man of the liquid name "After the Ball," this syndicate undertook, in Plain Dealer of the 28th inst., to scourge "Argus" with a thong of small cords. Just here the writer will give this syndicate intimation that he is quite able to give a good account of himself, and not resort to the use of questionable or indecent language either. He also informs this syndicate that its interference in this matter is both discourteous and impertinent. The members of the syndicate would be recognized as gentlemen if they would neither talk nor write for the press. But their language fixes their status, and by that status they will be recognized. "Argus" has thus referred to the syndicate to give it to understand it has no right to meddle in this affair of his. But having been launched on the public with a disreputable purpose, and boasting of a swamping amount of literary capital, let it employ this capital in the
