DEFEATED IN THE LORDS.

The closing speeches preceding the final vote on the Home Rule Bill in the Commons were the most interesting delivered during the debate. Each party put up its best speakers to close the debate. Mr. Gladstone, who seems to have lost none of his intellectual or physical strength, made the closing argument on behalf of the Liberals, and his speech is described as a masterly vindication of the principles of the bill and a complete answer to the objections urged against it. He pointed to Canada, United States and other countries where the federal system has been adopted in support of his contention that it was altogether desirable to separate local from imperial affairs, and declared that the measure would not tend to disturb the unity of the empire or impose virtual slavery upon the minority in Ireland. He scoffed at the idea that Irishmen were not capable of governing themselves, and declared that the charge of incapacity was an insult to the Irish race. Justice McCarty, leader of the Nationalists, who followed, accepted the bill in its broad features as a just, fair settlement of the home rule demand. It would prove a splendid constitution for Ireland if passed in its present shape, though he admitted it contained defects of detail. These, however, could be remedied at a later stage. Joseph Chamberlain, on behalf of the Liberal Unionists, and Mr. Balfour, for the Conservatives, denounced the bill in all the moods and tenses. "If this bill ever be passed," said Mr. Chamberlain, "you will have the Irish coming to parliament demanding more and more, and putting pressure on ministry after ministry, until at last some minister will be found weak enough or base enough to buy the Irish vote by granting final separation. The mischief that the government has done by introducing this policy is irreparable. It has made enormously more difficult the government of Ireland; it has postponed indefinitely the hopes of the completion of a better settlement." Mr. Balfour declared the bill was "an absolute reversal of the constitution." It involved a change of every fundamental principle of the constitution. "What," he asked, "is the prospect of gain to Ireland? The Irish members have indulged in much criticism of the landlords, but they have never yet produced a practical proposal likely to be of permanent value. The present bill is a mockery of legislation. Everyone voting for it knows something of its worthlessness, and to pass it is like trying to put life in a dead carcass." The vote, 301 for, to 267 against the bill, shows that Gladstone has managed to keep the Liberal ranks unbroken despite the onslaughts of the opposition. That the bill would be defeated in the House of Lords was a foregone conclusion, but few expected so heavy a vote against it. The Lords gave their opinion on the question with no uncertain voice. A measure which had occupied the attention of the Commons for eighty-two days was rejected by them after a debate of a few hours, by a vote of 419 to 41. This, however, does not mean that Home Rule is dead. The battle will have to be fought over again in the constituencies, and the people will in the end render the final verdict. Should their decision be recorded in favor of the measure the House of Lords would not dare reject it a second time.

GOOD ADVICE.

A young man who recently returned to his home in York County, N. B., from the United States, after an absence of seventeen years, gives some good advice to those who intend leaving this province with the hope of bettering their condition in the neighboring republic. The Gleaner gives the following account of his impressions and experiences:—He left Stanley with funds in hand, fully convinced that he could better his condition in the neighboring republic. The only employment he could find when he arrived in the United States was work he would not stoop to do at home. He took this, however, to make both ends meet, hoping to get something better in the future. He was forced to work as steadily as a machine, and when a change of labor did come, as he thought for the better, it was the same story, work, work, work, and for pay which would no more than keep him. It was the boss who made the money and the profits; the laborers and mechanics were the slaves. Seventeen years of his life were spent in this way. With the utmost economy he could save nothing, and when the crash of this summer came and he was thrown out of work he was obliged to come home. It was not, however, until his return that he thoroughly appreciated the great advantages of New Brunswick farm life, and the facilities our people possess of making comfortable homes and life comparatively easy. When he left New Brunswick, farm life was a drudgery. An oxen, a sled and a wagon, a scythe and a rake, and one or two other rude implements were about all some farmers possessed in addition to their homes and rough barns and half cleared farms. To-day he finds their fields laden with oats, wheat potatoes, corn, turnips and everything else a farmer can raise with profit. These same farmers or their sons are prosperous and independent with happy sons and daughters growing up about them. The oxen have given place to teams of excellent draught horses, the rude sleds and wagons to substantial ones. Each farmer has his buggy or carriage and his driving horse, the mowing machine and the horse-rake do the work of the old fashioned scythe and the wooden pronged instrument. In addition to this, the women are not the slaves they were a quarter of a century ago. Nearly every house has the sewing machine, and the organ, and altogether life is made what it ought to be. The last quarter of a century has been, this young man claims, one long stride of solid progress in New Brunswick. The young men who think to leave their homes and do better in the United States are unwise. He speaks from experience and in the interests of the young men in New Brunswick, he says, when he gives this advice: Allow no representations young men to tempt you from your homes in New Brunswick.

Should Women Be Free.

Should women be free is a question that has long agitated the minds of people, and a question worthy of our consideration. In the days of ancient Rome woman was held to be on a footing with man. But since those days of yore there seems to have been a retrograde movement. As Tennyson would say, "Reversion has been dragging Evolution in the mud." Woman is now deemed unable to cope with her companion and has thus been forced to take a lower stand on the stage of society. By man she is regarded as his inferior rather than his equal. And in this position she is virtually in bondage. As a girl she must confirm to certain established customs, and though she may have the capacity to rival the best of the boys in either play or work, she must stand aside and remain neutral.

At the marriage altar the husband affirms, "With all my worldly goods I thee endow." But oh, is it so. Nay, sad to say, it is often the exact opposite. By diligent and faithful endeavour the wife may add much to their worldly possessions. But her claim is none the more. It is all in her husband's hands, at his mercy and will.

So, in that line is closed the road to riches, the avenue to wealth. Even so it is with that of honours, titles, and position. As it has been said, the great idea is man, never woman. To him belong the Bar, the Pulpit, the Medical profession, the Mercantile pursuits, while to her belongs that sweet contentment, it may be, of looking on, of seeing others make their mark in life's broad field of battle, and yet, "like dumb driven cattle," be forced to remain inactive.

Nevertheless, there are many, yes numbers of our women whose learning and abilities would adorn any office or position and who have in more than one way proved their aptitude for business, their power to compete successfully with man in any work of life.

Now, it is an admitted fact that the women of to-day number more than one half of our population, and those that may happen to own property are taxed equally with the men, yet they are not allowed that privilege of using the ballot, of voting even on their own property. In only one instance are women allowed to vote, and that is at a school meeting providing they are rate payers. To them is closed the possibility of becoming members of parliament, of town or county councils, or of exercising their judgement in deciding the great political questions of the day. "Such a universal oppression," (says one writer) has involved our society in calamity." But it cannot long exist. And though the present generation may never live to see the day, yet the time will be when sex privileges and sex disqualifications will be abolished, and a fair field given to all alike.

St. John at Patmos, saw in his vision "A tree by the river of life, whose leaves were for the healing of nations." Even so it is now. Our nation is to be healed of social abominations, of lusts, treacheries, vices and crimes. And the liberty of woman to vote will be the first round in the ladder to be attained. It will be the dawn of day in man's regeneration. As a very distinguished writer of the present day has said:—"We believe in the future of humanity when it shall cast off all sickness, be free from disorder and dreams, and feeling sentiment, when war shall cease and the arms of oppression be looped. When Truth shall penetrate every thought and Justice ride triumphant. But the glorious time cannot arrive until women are made free." Then liberty shall expand her faculties and multiply her powers. No longer a rapid butterfly or a soulless drudge, she will become the worthy equal of man, competent to rival in any pursuit of life.

Unbearable Agony.

For three days I suffered severely from summer complaint, nothing gave me relief and I kept getting worse until the pain was almost unbearable, but after I had taken the first dose of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry I found great relief and it did not fail to cure me. Peary in Greenland.

St. John's, Nfld., Sept. 5.—Lieut. Peary's steamer Falcon arrived here to-day. She left Peary and his party all well at the head of Bowdoin Bay, North Greenland, August 20. Peary had at that time 80 dogs, 20 tons of Walrus meat and 11 deer on hand. One incident of this expedition will be the birth of a child. Late in September Mrs. Peary is expected to become a mother. The glamour, fascination, and temptation surrounding the stage are brilliantly delineated in "The Skirts of Chance," by Capt. Alfred Thompson, the prize novelle published in "Tales from Town Topics" No. 9. Leona Fabulo, the heroine is a premiere danseuse of fascinating beauty and exceptional grace, and her struggles and triumphs and love for the Hon. Bertie Margorel—a cad of the first water—make one hundred and fifty pages of absorbing reading. Vivid pen pictures of London and Continental Europe abound in the story, and European life at high pressure is faithfully and unerringly described. The bright miscellaneous matter following the story is equal to that of any preceding issue of "Tales from Town Topics." Town Topics, 21 West Twenty-third street, New York.

One of the best known and ablest physicians in New Brunswick has said: I regard GRODER'S BOTANIC DYSPEPSIA SYRUP as an excellent remedy and one destined to attain a large sale.

One who has used above remedy has this to say:

SALISBURY, N. B., May 3rd, 1893.

This is to certify that after suffering for about seven years with Dyspepsia, I was induced by a friend to give your remedy a trial. I had tried so many with such indifferent results that I felt skeptical of so called Sure Cures and remedies. However, I am glad to say that I tried your Groder's Syrup to the extent of two bottles and have never had a twinge of dyspepsia since last November. Yours, J. E. FOSTER.

The harmonious testimony of many witnesses should convince you that GRODER'S SYRUP CURES DYSPEPSIA.
