Accident at Newcastle.

The Newcastle Advocate of Wednesday has the following account of the accident to the steamer Rustler:—

We stop the press to give what particulars we could gather of the terrible accident which occurred just below Newcastle, for which we are indebted to a passenger who was on board the Rustler.

Last night as the steamer Rustler was returning from the picnic at Bartibogue, after calling at Chatham and Douglastown, and when off Kerr's mill she ran too close, striking the lower corner of the wharf, the timber of which lifted and passed through the cabin in front of the paddle box, and passing through the cabin broke through the inner partition and struck the main steam pipe leading from the boiler to the cylinders, and filling the boat with steam, scalding several persons.

At the time of the collision the fireman and three young ladies were sitting in the cabin, one of whom was killed, another jumped overboard through the window and was drowned, the other had her arm broken and was slightly scalded. The boat in the meantime drifted out into the river, where she was anchored. A number of the passengers were landed at Kerr's mill wharf by DeWolfe and others in a row boat.

The St. Nicholas shortly after came along and took off the remainder of the passengers, and also took those landed by the boat at Kerr's mill, and proceeded to Newcastle.

The Rustler was towed up by the ferry boat late last night. The excitement was intense and the screams of passengers frightful, several persons being prevented from jumping overboard.

The sufferers by the accident are:—Killed—Miss Morrison, daughter of Charles Morrison. Drowned—Miss Landry, daughter of Jerome Landry. Arm broken and scalded—Miss Driscoll. Several were slightly scalded.

Evidence Brought Out at the Coroner's Inquest.

NEWCASTLE, Sept. 7.—Coroner Dr. Francis Desmond of Newcastle began an inquest on the remains of Miss Morrison yesterday. The jury are: E. Lee Street (foreman), W. A. Hickson, Donald Morrison, Alex. Stewart, John Clarke, and J. H. Phinney.

The coroner and jury proceeded in the forenoon to the house of Mr. Morrison, where the body lay, and examined it. It was crushed at the abdomen. They next visited Kerr's mill wharf, where the fatality occurred, and examined the surroundings.

At three o'clock the enquiry was continued in Dr. Desmond's office.

Samuel Thompson, Q. C., represented the crown, and Hon. M. Adams was there in the interests of Mr. Morrison, father of the deceased.

H. H. Johnson was the first witness sworn, and in his evidence he said he was on the port side of the bow, with his back to the rail. He turned around and saw the wharf looming up on the right. He turned and looked up to the pilot house but did not see anyone. Before he could sing out to the captain the boat struck.

J. R. Lawlor was next examined, and in his evidence he said he took a spyglass to day and looked from Murray or red light to Douglastown wharf. The steamer in his estimation, in making a direct course from Douglastown wharf to the light, would give the Kerr mill wharf a wide berth in passing. The course of the steamer on a night like Tuesday night with passengers on board, should, he thought, be in the middle of the river.

He did not think there was anything which had there been due diligence exercised, would have caused the boat to go so far astray. The captain's direct course between Douglastown and Newcastle was by the red light known as Murray light.

It came out in the evidence that the Rustler had no engine bell, and also that the captain and crew lost all self-possession.

Hon. Mr. Adams, on behalf of Mr. Morrison, addressed the coroner, claiming that the evidence and testimony would justify a warrant for the arrest of the manager, captain, engineer, fire-man, and deck hands for manslaughter.

Mr. Thompson said his duty as representing the crown was to instruct the coroner, who could not, as the matter now stood, take the course demanded by Mr. Adams. The coroner could not issue such warrants until after the inquest was ended.

Mr. Adams pointed out that he might make a complaint to the magistrate and have warrants issued for the parties, and said he would do so in the event of the coroner not holding them in bail.

The coroner said he did not feel he was called upon to issue warrants, especially as that could be done on complaint before any justice. No charge had been preferred before him against anybody yet. He was merely conducting an enquiry into the cause of the death of Miss Morrison.

This ended the proceedings for today and the enquiry was adjourned till tomorrow at 10 a. m.

NEWCASTLE, Sept. 8.—The inquest was continued to-day. The witnesses examined were: Cooper, fireman; McDonald, engineer; McDonald, deckhand, and Captain John Bullock of the steamer Nelson. Nothing new came out of the evidence.

The enquiry was adjourned till tomorrow morning, when Capt. Russell of the Rustler and several passengers will be examined.

NEWCASTLE, Sept. 9.—The inquest on the body of Miss Morrison, killed in the accident to the steamer Rustler near Chatham on Tuesday last, was concluded on Saturday. The verdict was: "That May Agnes Morrison came to her death from a stick of timber running into the boat at Kerr's mill wharf, caused by the negligence of Capt. John Russell in steering his boat out of its proper course on the 5th Sept inst." Mr. Thomson, Q. C., acting for the crown, advised the coroner to arrest Capt. John Russell, as the verdict was in effect manslaughter. Capt. Russell was taken in charge.

The Four Cardinal Points.

The four cardinal points of health are the stomach, liver, bowels and blood. Wrong action in any of these produces disease. Burdock Blood Bitters acts upon the four cardinal points of health at one and the same time, to regulate, strengthen and purify, thus preserving health and removing disease.

Little River Notes.

Farmers are unusually busy with the grain which promises an abundant crop.

J. McKee & Sons have taken advantage of the recent freshet to get their logs down, and have been sawing the last fortnight.

Our days are cool, our evenings chilly, two facts to warn the people to prepare for the never failing, though sometimes long deferred visitor, Jack Frost.

The young folks of this place have been unusually energetic in devising amusements the last few weeks, probably warned by the chilly breeze that these are the last days of summer.

On the 24th of Aug., about thirty-five of us started for Dixon's shore, about six miles from here. The day being fine the spirits of the participants ditto, and the scenery something grand, and as each fair one seemed interested in the safe transit of a formidable looking basket, our readers may imagine the party was confident that the wants of the inner man would be equally satisfied. Swings were provided for those who cared for that amusement, while an extensive platform was quickly laid for those who cared to trip the light fantastic toe. This was also well patronized. Lunch was served on the green and judging from the way cakes, pies, etc., disappeared, we were assured that though men's hearts may break they still eat on.

At five the company started for home, tired, yet all satisfied that Dixon's shore was the place for a picnic. Among the strangers present were Mrs. Lottie, St. John, Miss Mugridge, Shediak, Miss Allanack, Moncton, Mrs. Jones, Everett, Mass., Miss Hyslop, and Mr. A. McDonald, Boston.

Mr. Dienstead preached to a large and interested audience here a fortnight ago.

Last Monday evening a committee of young ladies and gentlemen gave a social dance in Mr. McDonald's new house.

The night was fine, and the committee indefatigable in their efforts to promote the pleasure of their guests. At twelve o'clock the party broke up all well satisfied with the time, going home not by two as is usually the case, but all in a crowd.

Rev. Mr. Boal of Truro, gave a magic lantern display of Stanley's travels in Africa, which was very interesting and much appreciated by the people of this place.

Miss Allanack of Moncton, is visiting her aunt, Mrs. J. McKee.

Mrs. Jones of Everett, Mass., who has been spending the summer months here, left last week for her home.

Mr. A. McDonald of the Clifton House, Boston, has been visiting his parents here.

Miss Mugridge of Shediak, is spending a few weeks here, the guest of her sister, Mrs. O. C. Weldon.

Mrs. Lottie, (nee Miss Hicks,) has been visiting her old friends here. She returned to her home in St. John, Saturday.

A couple of our young people drove to Buctouche, Tuesday night to take advantage of Rev. Mr. Boal's magic lantern display. Verily our boys are to the front every time.

A young gentleman of Buctouche and a young lady of this place started to attend a dance given in Cocagne. Fancy their chagrin at finding themselves instead of at the scene of revelry, at J. B.'s shingle mill. We would advise them to appeal to headquarters to have sign boards put up. As this is no light matter, we hope the authorities will give it their attention at once.

He Loved Children.

A man with three children entered a restaurant in a German town, and after they were all seated he said, "Now children, are you hungry?"

"Yes."

"Would you like some sausages?"

"Yes, yes."

"Waitress, bring three sausages—two for myself—that makes five. Ah, I have forgotten the bread. Waitress, some bread. Now eat away."

"There was a solemn jingling of knives and forks, the sausages were demolished and the children's faces were all over smiles.

"Enjoy it, eh?"

"Yes."

"Like some more sausages?"

"Yes, yes."

"Waitress, two or three more sausages."

These, too, vanished. The guest ordered some beer, having drunk which he took his hat and stick and said to the children: "Now, you must be very good and quiet, I shall be back directly. I am only going to get some cigars."

"Alright!"

Five minutes passed, a quarter of an hour, half an hour. Then the landlord said to the children, "Your father is a long time in coming."

"He is not our father! We were playing outside when the man came up to us and asked us if we would like some sausages. We all shouted 'Yes,' and then the man brought us in here."—Tit-Bits.

He Was too Killing.

Jane wanted to go to the circus and John to the theatre.

"We can go to the theatre anytime," she said, "but the circus is here only for a week and we have not the chance of going to it."

"Well, as you like," said John; "but allow me to say this: I will not be responsible for the consequences."

"What consequences?" asked Jane in surprise.

"These consequences," answered John gravely: "Suppose one of the lions should break out of the cage while we were there, it's all over with you—"

"All over with me?"

"Certainly. The lions ain't blind, are they?"

"N—no. But what has that got to do with me?"

"Just this. If you look to me to be sweet enough to eat, how would you look to a raging, roaring lion? He will think you a delicious morsel, and you are gone."

"But, John, there will be other girls there beside me."

"I know it, but you will be the sweetest one there."

"Very well, John, dear; I think, darling we'd better go to the theatre."

Justifiable Language.

A tall, sun-burned, red-faced, excelsior-haired, long-legged fellow of twenty-one from the country had been arrested for using profane language.

"Don't you know better than to be swearing on the street?" inquired the court.

"I didn't know I swore, your Honor," exclaimed the prisoner.

"That's worse than if you did."

"May I tell you how it was, your Honor?"

"Yes, and be quick about it."

"Well, your Honor, I just got into town about noon and had something to eat, and after dinner I thought I'd take in the sights. While I was thinkin', a young man wearin' a pancake hat with a sky-blue band on it, a pink shirt, smokin' a paper-kivered cigar, and he had on white pants rolled up, an' hit was dry weather."

"What's that got to do with the charge against you?" inquired the court, as the prisoner stopped to take breath.

"Well, your Honor," continued the prisoner, "when I seen that I was so discomfuddled that I just blurted out, 'Well, I'll be d—d' and the policeman took me up."

"Case dismissed," smiled the court and proceeded to reprimand the officer.—Boston Herald.

Disposed of Her.

A missionary from Africa tells the following story:

"One day an old chief came to me with two wives, one old, the other young, and wanted to joined my church. I told him we didn't allow a man to have more than one wife.

"He went away, and the next week came back with the young wife, both of them smiling, and said:

"Now me join church; me all right now."

"Where is your old wife?" I asked.

"She all right, too; me eat her up," placidly answered the old savage.

"I postponed the decision as to his application for admission to a more convenient season."—Sunday Mercury.
