ing house came to it in the shape of Lady Julia, who took up her abode there—not altogether to please herself—for the first week.

"Rosamund ought to have you with her," said Hartland.

"You mean because of her engagement?"

"Yes."

"I did hope—I did hope—oh, my dear Hartland, is it really, absolutely, irremediably settled? Must it be? The dear child was always so impulsive, so impetuous; and it all happened so rapidly that I had a kind of feeling as if this great loss might—," and she looked wistfully into his face. Somehow or other she had fancied that her sister dead, might have been able to effect what living she had failed to do. "She was so set against it, poor, poor dear," she murmured.

He was silent; he could not now say, as at another time he might and would have said, unreasonably and foolishly set against it; but neither would he acquiesce, nor hold out hopes which were most unlikely to be fulfilled.

"I am sure if the dear child wishes me to be here, I will stay," sighed Lady Julia, seeing this, "but it will be a painful, painful thing to do. If indeed you would come also?"

But that he could not do. "My brother-in-law will not be always in his own rooms, will he?" was her next timorous inquiry.

"Your presence will draw him from them sooner than anything else."

"And—and—of course I will remain if you wish me to do so; but I must have my Hannah—or no, old Charlotte would be better—and some clothes—and oh, dear, there will be the mourning to be seen to. And all those poor children's mourning also."

"You see you are really needed here, Aunt Julia."

"Well, my dear, well; I don't say I am not," resignedly.

"Rosamund is too young to see to everything."

"Much, much too young."

"And she has her own prospects to think of too."

Lady Julia groaned. Then out it all came again. "I cannot like this Major Gilbert. I care not what he has, or can offer. He is not worthy of her. He can never become one of us. While you—"

"While I?" said Hartland with a smile, as she stopped short. "You think I should have done better for my cousin?" he continued, after a moment.

"A hundred thousand times better. And had he not come across her path just now, and had she not, as it were, been driven to him by—oh, I know, I see how it was. But for that, she could, she would, she must have loved you!"

Was it fancy, or did she see a strange expression pass over his face as she spoke? He did not answer her. He did not speak again for some time.

At length he roused himself abruptly, as was his wont after concluding a matter in his own mind. "Look here, aunt: it is not for me to dictate to you, but I will tell you plainly what my own feelings are about Major Gilbert. It is nothing to me, and ought to be nothing, that, as a companion, he is not strictly to my taste. He does not suit me; but what of that? It appears he suits Rosamund; and it is surely better that she should marry a man made of good sterling stuff, even although he be not pre-eminently a gentleman, than a fool with any amount of polish on the surface?"

"But all men are not either bores or fools?" plaintively murmured she.

But she was not to get out her say.

"It is useless to expect that such a girl as Rosamund will not choose for herself," pursued Hartland, looking steadily in front of him. "Major Gilbert is quite the sort of hero to take her fancy."

"Hero? Oh, I had forgotten!" and Lady Julia's eyelids dropped again. "Dear dear! what an age ago that seems! Certainly we ought not to forget that good deed."

"It has come down to being a 'good deed,' has it?"

"But, then, I never dreamed of this to follow."

"Would that have altered your opinion?"

"My opinion is, that he ought never to have allowed himself to think of entering our family," averred the high-born spinster, with sudden asperity. "I must say that I do like people to know their places; and I must say, too, Hartland, that knowing all you know, I think it was hardly kind," and her poor voice quavered with the unwelcome accusation, "hardly quite fair, or kind of you, to be on his side."

"My dear aunt, he never asked me to be on his side; as a matter of fact, I was not—perhaps I am not particularly on his side now,—but it is nothing to him whether I am or no. He fell in love with my cousin, without saying 'By your leave' to any one; and it was only when it was patent to all that she—she cared for him in return, that it seemed to me they were both being hardy dealt with."

"But you certainly spoke of him with admiration the other day?"

"So did you," and he half-smiled.

"But you went on after you knew of this; after Rosamund had sent over the news, last night."

"Which at once checked your enthusiasm. But you see, ma'am, somehow it did not act so spontaneously on mine."

I admire Gilbert as much as I ever did; I admire his pluck and nerve, his self-reliance and self-devotion. I think he did a thing that day which only a fellow who was in many respects—and substantial respects—a fine fellow, could have done. And I honor Rosamund," he added slowly, "for having the courage to see this, and value at his true worth, a downright, straight-forward soldier, who will do his best to make her happy. She is above minding his small, trifling deficiencies. She sets us all an example. I, for one, am resolved to profit by it. In the light in which she sees her future husband, I too will look upon him, and," he added emphatically, "I will look upon him in no other."

"Well, I shall never like him; but I will suffer him," conceded the unfortunate Lady Julia, with the air of a martyr.

The Raw, Cutting Winds

Bring to the surface every latent pain. A change of even a few degrees marks the difference between comfort and pain to many persons. Happily disease now holds less sway. Science is continually bringing forward new remedies which successfully combat disease. Polson's nervilleine—nerve pain cure—has proved the most successful pain relieving remedy known. Its application is wide, for it is equally efficient in all forms of pain whether internal or external. 25 cents a bottle, at druggists.

The Gale in Newfoundland.

St. John's, Nfld., Aug. 23.—The gale which raged in Nova Scotia on Monday reached here on Tuesday. In this city much damage was done on shore and to shipping in the harbor. Reports are coming in from other parts of the colony and the damage reported is enormous. A large number of the partly built houses in the city were levelled to the ground, while a number of small crafts in the harbor were either sunk or driven ashore. The wind swept over the city with great fury, and it was almost impossible for human beings to venture on the street.

Great damage was done to the crops all over the Island.

So far the details of the depredations of the storm along the coast and on the Grand Banks are very meagre, but it is believed they will be awful when the details are obtainable. Large loss of lives is feared on the Banks.

The Old, Old Story.

BRANTFORD, Aug. 28.—The old, old story crops up again here, and Frank Elliott is the narrator this time. He says he has for six years been a victim of kidney disease and could get nothing to cure or relieve him. Dodd's kidney pills did the business in quick time and now he is well and happy. Mr. Elliott learned of the efficacy of these pills from accounts published of Archie Rymal's case. This gentleman, it will be remembered, was cured of paralysis, consequent of kidney disease, by Dodd's kidney pills.

To Tax Bachelors.

The unmarried men of Quebec are in a terrible state of mind over the serious proposition of the provincial government to impose a tax of from $50 to $400 on all bachelors. It is said that in Quebec there is a growing indisposition on the part of men to get married, and there is no excuse for it, as there is an abundant supply of marriageable women. It is not stated whether the proposed tax is intended as a punishment for failure to perform a public duty, or as a license for the enjoyment of a state of single blessedness, but either way it will work a manifest injustice to the large class of bachelors who would gladly marry if they could find the right woman. There are few men who remain single from depravity or from choice. Most bachelors have either failed to find the right girl, or else they, having found her, hesitate to condemn her to a life of slavish labor.

From Bar Island.

This is to certify that I have had Rheumatism and have used SCOTT'S CURE FOR RHEUMATISM with great satisfaction, and I feel it my duty to recommend it to the world at large for its great value. Yours truly, JOHN W. BENTON.

Donahoe's Magazine seems surely to have in it the elements of great usefulness and power. It breathes a spirit of deep human sympathy and broad fraternity that is most inspiring. It differs from the other magazines in that it takes editorial position on the various questions of the day, besides having all the usual features of an illustrated review. In discussing the money question this month it suggests the thought that until there is more Christianity in commerce, until there are fewer hypocrites among the professed followers of Christ, there will be no true cure for human distress. The array of articles for September is especially fine, the two most striking being "John Boyle O'Reilly, the Man," by Edward A. Moseley of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and "Faith and Science," by Rev. Father Zahn, who made the sensation at the Plattsburg Summer School by his advanced ideas. In this number also begins a serial story by Marcus Waterman, the artist, illustrated by his self.

USE SKODA'S DISCOVERY,

The Great Blood and Nerve Remedy

NO HOPE OF RECOVERY. WEAKNESS, NERVOUSNESS, SLEEPLESSNESS. A WONDERFUL CURE.

MR. VAIL, the well-known Checker of the I. C. R. Freight Dept., St. John, N. B., makes the following statement:

"Oct. 12, 1892.—Last spring I was completely run down from the effects of overwork and an attack of the Grip. I was weak and nervous and had no appetite. COULD NOT SLEEP and felt tired and depressed. I tried Doctors and various remedies but got no better, and had to give up work. I became so weak and exhausted that I had GIVEN UP ALL HOPE OF RECOVERY, when I was advised to try

HAWKER'S NERVE AND STOMACH TONIC. I purchased 6 bottles and in a month's time after taking 4 of them, had gained 21 lbs in weight. My appetite returned, I slept well grew STRONG and VIGOROUS and am Entirely Cured of Nervousness.

I am stronger now than I have been for year and can do my work without fatigue or exhaustion. To anyone suffering from weakness or exhaustion I heartily commend it as a most valuable Restorative Tonic, as it restored me to health and strength, after all other remedies had failed."

We endorse the above statement of Mr. Vail's case, as we have had a personal knowledge of it, and hereby do affirm his statement to be true in every particular.
