The Easter Lesson.

The Lord is risen, joy is in the air, Faith triumphs over prejudice and pride, God's voice hath spoken—and the Cross is on Calvary's crest where Truth was crucified.

Not to the Tomb where Heaven was disclosed, This mother came that primal Easter day; But to the Cross where Sorrow self-imposed To life eternal glorified the way.

And there beneath the Easter's radiant skies, Her mother heart swayed by the hour's control, Up to the Cross directs her infant's eyes 'To have the memory graven on his soul.

Thus has it been since that first Easter-tide, The Christian mother seeks the Cross this day To show her child Faith's glory and its guide, And pray its light may lead him Heaven's way.

The extent of future railroad building is beginning to be discussed by some eminent writers of the day. Not a few take the ground that the construction of new lines must be limited, claiming that the world now has about all it needs for many years to come, but others hold a different view and point to the small mileage in many sections of our country, as well as in other lands. The effect that decreased railroad building would have on iron consumption is being discussed, and in this connection Hon. Abram S. Hewitt, in a letter to The Manufacturers' Record, gives the following views: "I should say that the house-building era of iron and steel, which is now in full development, would absorb quite as much steel as the railroads have heretofore done for new construction. We are living in an age of force expended in industrial directions. I do not pretend to estimate the limits of its application. Practically, all that one generation inherits is the work of the generation immediately preceding it. No doubt the progress of invention will lead to new avenues of consumption."

Donahoe's for March. Every number of Donahoe's demonstrates that this very unique magazine has won for itself a distinctive place in high-class periodical literature. Its readers expect every month something striking and original, something new, and full of flesh and blood, and they are never disappointed. Donahoe's does not rattle around among the dry bones of dead heresies and forgotten creeds and extinct issues but is a magazine of to day and to-morrow, full of the 19th century spirit, and in touch with the best thought of the present. In the current number a Catholic clergyman considers the subject of gambling in a way that will make one talk or think, according to the depth of his mind. There is an article on cooperation and human nature which most effectively disposes of the old argument that competition is the immutable law of trade. Two handsomely illustrated and charmingly written sketches of life in the Bermudas and the Bahamas will appeal to all who live in colder latitudes. General Shields, the greatest man of Irish blood in American history, receives just though tardy recognition. Tim Murnane, the famous base-ball writer, tells graphically of the greatest plays he has ever seen. Maurice Francis Egan gives some of his literary experiences that will be an eye opener for ambitious young writers. The original illustrations of the number by Louis Meynelle and James Kennedy are excellent, as their work always is.

Old-Time Games. It is curious to note how some of the games of the early ages have been handed down to the present time. The game, for instance, known as "Odd and Even," was a favorite with the young Egyptians and many of the little counters that he used are still preserved in the British Museum. There is also the game of draughts, which was played on the chequered board in the earliest times. The poor children were content with draughtsmen and boxes of rough pieces of clay. But the richer ones usually had beautifully carved iron-headed draughtsmen and boxes.

The young Greeks, too, were well provided with toys and games for their amusement. The toys were chiefly dolls made of baked clay, the arms and legs being jointed with string, and therefore movable. They had a favorite game called "Chytrinda," which has been preserved through many ages, and is now played by boys of "Puss in the Corner." In France the game is called "Quatre Coins," or four corners. Both in the old and the modern version five players are required, one occupying each of the four corners, while the fifth player stands in the middle.

His Opinion. It takes some lawyers to know how to achieve success whether or no, says the Detroit Free Press. To such an one an acquaintance applied the other day. "Say, George," he said, "I've got a case I want to ask you about and see if you will undertake it for me." "State it," responded the lawyer. The acquaintance did so. "Now what do you think of it?" he asked.

"I wouldn't touch it with a ten-foot pole." "Is that your professional opinion?" "That's just it." "All right, I'll drop it," and he started out. "By the way," suggested the lawyer, "you owe me $25." "What for?" asked the astonished visitor, stopping short. "My professional opinion in the case you have just submitted," was the unblushing answer, and the dazed visitor paid it before he recovered his wits.

The Lovers' Leap. Sappho killed herself by jumping from the Lovers' Leap, a Leucadian cliff. This leap was often taken by lovesick persons, who believed that if they survived the fall they would be effectually cured of a hopeless passion. The leaps were always witnessed by crowds of spectators, and the would-be suicides were in no way interfered with by the state. Boats were in attendance below to pick up the leapers if they came to the surface of the sea after the plunge. Sappho had a passion for a young man who did not return her love and leaped from the cliff in order to be cured. She perished in the fall. So also did Artemisia and many other celebrities. Pliny tells a curious story of an old Athenian miser who was in love with his cook and desiring a cure, went to have a look at the cliff. He peered over, shook his head, went home and married the cook. -St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

The Result not Satisfactory. The venerable Joaquin Miller, among other eccentricities used to have a warm spot in his heart for a tramp. He has defended the homeless knights of the road and readily found excuses for their chronic laziness and excesses. Miller even built a house on his California farm for the accommodation of tramps, and furnished it with plain but substantial comforts, frequent use of which was given any tramp who came that way.

The outcome he relates in an article in the last California Magazine: "Result! In less than a year the last sheet, pillow-slip, bedspread, frying pan and coffee pot was gone. Not only that, but the windows were broken and the ash burned. Too worthless to go out and carry in wood, one crowd broke up and buried my table and chairs and when I put in my head to protest they threatened to cremate the ol' crank in his own fireplace."

Mr. J. A. Carroll, St. Stephen, N. B. Says I have had Rheumatism very bad and could not find anything to help me. I purchased three bottles of SCOTT'S CURE FOR RHEUMATISM and it entirely cured me.

A farmer named Pepin was burned to death at Indian Lorette, Quebec, Tuesday evening. The unfortunate man entered his stable with the intention of thawing out the water pipes which were frozen. He left a tin containing some burning coals on the floor and went out for a few minutes. On returning he found smoke issuing from the building. He rushed in to save some of his stock, was overcome by the smoke and burned to a crisp. Several horses and cattle were burned.

The London Chronicle is authority for the statement that Lord Salisbury's attitude in regard to the Employer's Liability and Local Government bills has aroused a strong feeling of opposition to his course on the part of the Queen and the Prince of Wales. The reigning family, the Chronicle adds, has always had a keen sense of its own interests, and more than once has exerted its influence to prevent the peers from engaging in a conflict which might have its end in totally re-adjusting the constitution.
