NEW TOWER BRIDGE

A Structure Which Was Been Eight Years in Progress.

London Looks Upon it With Pride-An Engineering Combination Showing Wonderful Ingennity.

The new Tower Bridge which was opened for public accommodation on Saturday, June 30, by his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, on behalf of Her Majesty the Queen, has been eight years in progress. Long before June 21, 1886, when the Prince of Wales laid the foundation of the Tower Bridge, there had been much discussion of the best means of relieving the immense traffic across the Thames between the southern and northern sides, augmented by the large contributions from the Brighton and South-Eastern Railways. The Bridge House Estates Committee of the City Corporation came forward, and, adopting the grand conception of a bascule bridge designed by the city architect, the late Sir Horace of Pine Ridge, in said County of Kent, Jones, devoted the sum of £750,000 to its erection, with some further yearly grants for the maintenance of its engine and hydraulic power and lifts.

THE TOTAL LENGTH OF THE BRIDGE, which is level from ore abutment to the other, is 940 ft., while the centre of the river is left open for a waterway for ships the bridge. This central waterway, or suspension girders, one to the north and one to the south abutment.

THE SINKING OF THE FOUNDATIONS. of the piers and the building of the masonry superstructure above water bave involved very interesting operations. The depth of water on the sites of the two piers is about 33 ft. from high water datum to the river bed. To secure adequate foundations, iron caissons, each about 12 ft. square, were placed in a row, with 21 ft. space between each caisson, and at each end was one of angled form. Such a series of caissons provided for one side of the provided for the other side. Timber piles were next driven down in the 21 ft. interspaces, and the plates were removed from he contiguous sides of the caissons. The whole then became an iron dam, from which the interior core of gravel and soil was cleared out by divers and by a Priestman mechanical digger; then at over 27ft. pinned and an infilling of concrete was made to a height of 19 ft. Above this were laid courses of blue bricks and then forty-seven years; Jane Wellwood, wife feet to form the visible base of the tower, about forty-five years; Mary Cail, of being 70 ft in length and 24 ft. across.
