HOW IT FEELS TO STARVE

DIARY OF A MAN OF MORE THAN AVERAGE INTELLIGENCE.

He was Looking Forward Not to Breaking a Fasting Record, but to Death—Pathetic and Interesting is the Record.

George Marshall Sloan, lawyer, mathematician, Socialist and economist, died Sunday morning at the residence of Thomas Kelly, 3,149 Wabash avenue.

It is probable that at that hour, when the kindly hand of death was laid upon him there passed from earth the strongest and most capable spirit for good among the many who moulded socialistic labor thought in Chicago between the years 1879 and 1886. But he ended his own life at last, for though he considered that death was to him but the relaxation of the power of nature and then the end of all, for fifty days previous he had not taken food. He had addicted himself to the use of morphine. On July 8 he writes of his intention to starve:

"I am faint with hunger. I will try a little brandy and cracker. * * * I realize the solution of the problem of life now better than ever before. I am dying of inanition—slowly, it is true, but surely. * * * If the starvation is only accompanied by lack of consciousness, as is often the case, I will have an easy death and need not hasten it to escape torture. I will not be too weak to take a little morphine by swallowing, if I am too weak to inject it. I am sure now that I must die of starvation, and must alleviate the pain of it as I can."

He thought of the coming end of the last summer month and added to his notes:

"August and I should go on together. Certainly there is no object to be served by my living, but I want to die so that it will be manifest that my sanity is palpable, and manifest that I die of set purpose and with deliberation, as the only method of escaping continuous pain."

The subsequent entries of interest follow, a painful, weary story of suffering and anguish:

"Aug. 21—I am just what I was on Sept. 25, 1893. Nor have I changed mentally in any respect that I can notice. Physically there are changes, of course, and changes again since the date of the letter to the corner. All the while the healing process of nature has been exerted and new intestines have been made and the old patched up, all of which the autopsy, if properly conducted, will disclose. But I don't know how often I have repeated myself, and after all the sole question is: 'Has or has not a short cut between my stomach and intestines been built by nature to get around the stricture, I think, in my stomach?'"

"Aug. 24, Friday, 3.16 a.m.—No sleep. * * * I have found a place in the right thigh where I think I can inject directly into the blood. I think it's a vein. This prod leaves sore, and I will keep it so."

"6.30 a.m.—Pretty hungry. Eyes weak and sore—no sleep all night. * * * But I can keep my mind off the hunger, and the morphine deadens the pain."

"10.08—I think that the gnawing of hunger can scarcely be worse than I have endured. If I can manage to go along without bother for eight or ten days, then I can throw away the food after that till the end comes, if my pluck holds out. But that 40° is a very big word! Hunger, the natural craving for life, that will assert itself, though I can see nothing worth living for. * * *

"Pshaw! 'tis absurd to think of living, and my only anxiety should be that this record should show my sanity indisputably. To be sure, no one that knows me has the slightest idea that I am insane. * * *

"Aug. 25, Saturday, 10.12 a.m.—I suppose that I am now living on myself."

"Aug. 26, Sunday—The wasting away begins to show in my arms and legs, also in my chest. The fat of my breast is nearly all absorbed. My eyes are weak and my muscles don't obey. I spilled some oil filling the can this evening."

"Aug. 28, Tuesday, nine days; six more enough. * * * So weak I can barely stand to arrange my bed. * * *

"Aug. 29, Wednesday—No sleep, dizzy; noise in my ears louder. * * * 11 p.m.—Have taken to-day 4.075 grains, more than during any day in all my life."

"Aug. 30, Thursday—These folks have not the slightest notion of what I am at. If they should and my will is strong enough, I can throw away the food for a day or so."

"Saturday, Sept. 1, 11.32 a.m.—Bad taste, very weak, headache, sore. It seems very difficult to die. But as thirteen days have now passed, during which I have not eaten more than six ounces certainly though I drank at will, and perhaps from a pint to a quart daily, I don't think I will be long now in solving the great problem."

"12.35 p.m.—I can't make many more entries. My pen is heavy, my brain confused, mouth nauseous. Now the injection seems to produce no inflammatory action. It lies like a great white blister under the skin and all around it the flesh remains white or natural color. Scarcely a tinge of red shows the flesh conscious of a foreign substance. Vitality must be very low; pulse is just discernable to sight and little better to feeling. Drowsiness seems coming on after that last dose."

"10 p.m.—I find every tooth in my head on the right side loose and can wiggle each and all with my finger. But as this is the close of the fifteenth day my 'trespass' is not to be long delayed, and if I have no greater fight against my appetites than I have had I will win easily enough. I think the second and third days were the most trying. I've used a great deal of paper to-day, but I think I can afford it. If I weaken as much to-morrow as I have to-day I won't be able to write at all."

"Monday, Sept. 3, 5.15 a.m.—Now sick at stomach—ice allayed it after a while, but left me so weak I could not walk. * * * Suppose a man beyond the reach of medical aid, or if within his reach, who is laughed at and called insane, when he tells what his trouble is and wishes to be treated for it as he describes it; that when he takes morphine to protract his life and enable him to endure the pain, is he so blameable? Suppose, then, he finds that his case has finally become incurable if the doctors would now use the remedies he wished them to, and so concludes to quit eating and let himself starve since each particle of food he takes but gives him excruciating pain, is he much to blame that? So I'm not afflicted with groundless terrors or, indeed, with terrors of any sort, with insomnia, with indifference; for I have been nearly a year coming to the resolution I am now putting into practice and I am glad to say, have been able to maintain for full thirteen days. * * *

"Hoping I may have the fortitude to endure to the end. I lie waiting for what I could do in a minute. But I think that the charge of insanity, &c., will vanish if I meet death in this fashion. * * *

"Sept. 4, Tuesday—Yesterday used but one grain, and then did without for more than twenty-four hours as a last protest that I am not a morphine eater, and that it gives me no trouble to quit it. Now I only took this dose to keep my nerve up, as I am dying, and my breath is very offensive. Perhaps it will improve that. I cannot read; I am too weak to hold up the book. Even to write this gives me trouble. I suppose I will last out the day. So often when I thought that I was dying I passed along. Life is so strong in me. * * *

"4.25 p.m.—Took 2.5 gr. to numb my consciousness if possible; am semi-nauseated and cannot read anything nor can I
