WILDE ON A TREADMILL.

The Remarkable Transformation in the Emaciated Aesthete.

Who would have thought not long ago that Oscar Wilde, the apostle of dainty aestheticism, the wit and poet, feted everywhere and even worshipped at times by people of position and discernment—who would have dreamed it even?—would come to sweating on a prison treadmill? Yet there he is, shaven and shorn, rough clothing chafing his flesh that once knew only the softest fabrics, the associate of vulgar and brutal criminals—himself a criminal. No more unlikely transformation could have been imagined. He who predicted such a future for this lover of the beautiful would have been regarded as a malicious iconoclast or an idiot. Yet there is Wilde, treading, treading, treading with the drear prospect of continuing to tread for nearly two years to come.

At Pentonville, where Wilde is serving the sentence, the prison suit is of dirty drab canvas marked with three arrows, heavy rough shoes and an ugly Scotch cap. Life in this prison is not pleasant by any means. Wilde's sleeping accommodations are the scantiest. Cots are unknown to the prisoners there. A plank bed composed simply of a board raised six inches above the floor, without a mattress, is what he sleeps on. He is given each week two clean sheets of heavy coarse material and two rugs as rough as ordinary horse blankets. The rules about communication with the outside world are exceedingly severe. He can neither write nor receive a letter from his friends or family until three months of his sentence have been served, and then he may write and receive one letter a month, and be visited for twenty minutes by three friends.

The treadmill is the great bugaboo of the English convict. It is almost barbaric in its severity and savors somewhat of the torture inflicted upon unfortunate 500 years ago. It is shaped somewhat like the wheel of a stern-wheel steamer or the paddle-wheel of a ferry-boat, except that the treadmill is considerably wider than they are. For the accommodation of the many involuntary workers at a height which a man of ordinary physique can easily reach is a long bar of wood. When all is ready the prisoner jumps upon one of the steps of the wheel and grasps the bar with his hands. The steps are called floats in the far land of Pentonville. The weight of the men turns the wheel and as they sink down on one foot they must step up to the next float when it comes round. It is much like climbing a particularly nasty flight of steep stairs with no ending at the top.

What is more, there is no dodging or shirking the work. When the float comes round, Oscar Wilde, like all his brother felons must step on it, otherwise he will get an ugly knock on the shins by the ever-turning wheel, which will peel the bark off from the knee to the instep. It is not pleasant work by any means. It is the kind that completely takes the heart out of the most hardened criminal. At the end of a long day of ceaselessly stepping from float to float there is nothing to show for it. Each man is nothing more than a very insignificant section of a huge mass of machinery. The work of the convicts in America is play in comparison with it. In Pentonville all that the workers of the treadmill have to look forward to is the short breathing spells permitted by the prison regulations.

Oscar Wilde was sentenced to do hard labor, and this means that his time at treadmill will be four hours a day, the most severe work provided for by the prison rules. Two hours of this is done before dinner and two hours after. Some idea of the awful physical strain of the work can be gained from these facts: The men work twenty minutes and then have five minutes' rest. In those twenty minutes they have made the equivalent of an ascent of 6,000 feet, or a trifle more than a mile and an eighth. In four hours' work they have done the same labor that a man would do in climbing eleven miles of stairs. Going up four or five flights of stairs makes an ordinary man wish for an elevator.

The disheartening feature of the treadmill is that the criminal is always just where he started hour after hour and day after day. No talking is allowed on the wheel, and the silence is unbroken, except for the creaking of the ponderous machinery as it whirls around.

The food of Pentonville Prison is not what Wilde has been accustomed to by any means. On week days the prisoners get a dish of "skilly" for breakfast. Skilly is not very palatable, being a species of tasteless mush, but it is said to be healthy. Dinner consists of a tin bowl of broth, heavily charged with grease, and a chunk of bread as heavy as the traditional lead. Supper is a very light affair, consisting of bread and milk, the milk being extremely thin and of a light blue shade, indicating an intimate acquaintance with water.

The rules against any of the prisoners getting food other than that of the regular fare are very severe. More money than Oscar Wilde has at the present time would be required to bribe the warders to smuggle food to him. Besides, all the warders watch one another, and no one of them could enjoy a fat income from Wilde for any length of time without being discovered. Then the feeling against Wilde is so strong among the prisoners that he will be made as uncomfortable as they possibly can make him.

Charlie Mitchell, the prize-fighter, something over two years ago, served a brief term in Pentonville for assaulting an old man. Mitchell did treadmill work for a short time, and he afterwards said that it almost killed him. After his first half hour at it he resorted to every artifice to be excused from further work, but without avail, as the physicians said that he was the strongest man in the place.

Wilde is a man of large frame, and it is a question whether he will break down under the arduous task he will have to perform or develop strength and health.

A LANARK COUNTY FARMER'S REMARKABLE CURE.

Taken with Malarial Fever the After Effects of Which Brought Him to the Grave—He Gladly Speaks for the Benefit of Other Sufferers.

Smith's Falls Record.

Mr. Joseph N. Barton, who lives about a mile from the village of Merrickville, is one of the best known farmers in the township of Montague. Up to the spring of 1894 Mr. Barton had always enjoyed the best of health. At that time, however, he was taken with a bilious fever, the effects of which left him in a terribly weakened condition. When the time came round to begin spring operations on the farm he found himself too weak to take any part in the work, and notwithstanding that he was treated by an excellent physician, he was constantly growing weaker and his condition not only greatly alarmed himself but his friends. Having read so much concerning Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, he determined to give them a trial, and without consulting his physician he began their use. He only used one box, and not feeling better, he discontinued the use of the pills. This was where he now admits he made a serious mistake as he not only fell back to his former weakness, but became worse than before. He could now do no work of any kind, and the least exertion left him almost helpless. Life was a misery to him and he was on the point of giving his case up as hopeless when a friend strongly urged him to again begin the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. He agreed to do so and by the time he had used three boxes there was a marvellous change in his appearance, and he felt like a new man. He still continued to use this life-saving medicine, with astonishing results. During his illness he had fallen in weight to 135 pounds, but he soon increased to 180 pounds. In fact, as he says, the increase averaged about a pound a day while he was taking the pills. He is now able to do any kind of work on his farm, and it is needless to say that he is not only a firm believer in the efficacy of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, but loses no opportunity to sound abroad their praise, with the result that others in his locality have benefited by his experience and advice.

To those who are weak, easily tired, nervous, or whose blood is out of condition, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills come as a veritable boon, curing when all other medicines fail, and restoring those who give them a fair trial, to a full measure of health and strength. They will be found an absolute cure for St. Vitus dance, locomotor ataxia, rheumatism, paralysis, sciatica, the after effects of la grippe, loss of appetite, headache, dizziness, chronic erysipelas, scrofula, etc. They are also a specific for the troubles peculiar to the female system, correcting irregularities, suppressions and all forms of female weakness. In the case of men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork, or excesses of any nature. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold only in boxes bearing the firm's trade mark and wrapper (printed in red ink), and may be had of all druggists or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Brockville, Ont., or Schenectady, N. Y., at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50.

Sixty men were killed and three seriously injured by the explosion of powder in a ballist factory at Avigliano, Italy, on Wednesday. The explosion was caused by the carelessness of the victims.

E. G. SCOVILL, AGENT PELEE ISLAND GRAPE JUICE. MONROE 15th, 1895.

DEAR Sir,—My family have received great benefits from the use of the PELEE ISLAND GRAPE JUICE during the past four years. It is the best tonic and sedative for debility, nervousness and weak lungs we have ever tried. It is much cheaper and pleasanter than medicine. I would not be without it in the house.
