

How Long May Man Live? (Literary Digest.)

News was lately received from Homer, a town in the interior of this state, of the death of a citizen at the age of nearly one hundred and two years. Such items, which are not at all rare, prompt speculation as to the possibilities of increased longevity.

The new physiologists who tried to measure the movements of brain cells and invent machines to calculate the flow of nervous energy tell us that man is an unnatural creature. He was not meant for any such work as he put himself to.

Physicians have made great progress in the treatment of disease within a half-century, and there is every reason to hope that they will make many conquests in the next half-century.

A Wild Night in Bridgewater, N. S.

BRIDGEWATER, Aug. 9.—The Wyoming wild west show has come and gone, leaving behind several sad but infinitely wiser men. There was no sign of faking at the afternoon performance, but in the evening the sharpers got in their fine work and skinned $50 out of a shipwright named Isaiah Wagner, and several other sums ranging from $2 to $5 out of young greenhorns who thought they could beat the fakirs at their own game, but got very much left.

Fiddle Full of Money.

A Wichita, (Kan.) special runs: Hugh McGuire, a farmer near Goddard, this county, to day received a fiddle by express that had in it something more soothing to a Kansas farmer than music. Two years ago his uncle, Peter Conroy, died at Washington City, Conroy was supposed to have a good pile of money saved up, and as McGuire was his only heir he anticipated a little fortune.

The Outrage in China. A carpenter, sent to make some repairs in a private house, entered the apartment of the lady of the house with his apprentice.

"Mary," the lady called to her servant, "see that my jewel case is locked at once!"

The carpenter understood. He removed his watch and chain from his vest with a significant air, and gave them to his apprentice.

"John," he said, "take these right back to the shop. It seems that the house isn't safe!"
