SALISBURY SUSTAINED.

Since the last issue of THE REVIEW the bulk of the elections in the United Kingdom have been held and have resulted in a great accession of strength to the Conservative party under Lord Salisbury. The Liberal party has sustained a disastrous defeat.

Mr. Gladstone did not seek re-election. His principal lieutenants are either like Harcourt and Morley, beaten at the polls, or returned with greatly diminished majorities. At this writing it would seem that little more than one-third of the new house of Commons will follow the Liberal standard. It is now admitted in the Liberal camp that the change of leadership from Gladstone to Rosebery was a mistake. The Grand Old Man, although he could hardly have averted a party defeat had he retained the leadership, would probably not have been so utterly routed and overwhelmed as his more youthful and titled successor has been.

There are several causes for the sweeping change. The unpopularity of home rule for Ireland in the British constituencies, the want of organization in the Liberal ranks, the successful combination of various interests by the skillful manipulation of the Conservative and Unionist leaders, and lastly the fickleness of the proletariat upon whom the Liberal leaders relied mainly for support, are among the chief of these causes. Doubtless also the complication of continental affairs and the necessity for a strong government with a rigorous foreign policy had its effect upon the voters. The late Liberal government was dependent for its majority upon Irish votes and this fact had, or was thought to have, a paralyzing effect upon its foreign policy. The new government will be free from this trammel, having an undoubted majority outside of the Irish representatives.

Among the immediate effects will be that home rule becomes a dead issue. Our own Edward Blake is re-elected for Longford, and it must grieve the "intellectual giant" to find the cause which he crossed the Atlantic to advance, apparently farther from success than before. He is a much disappointed man both in Canadian and in imperial politics. But political changes come rapidly and sweepingly in Britain in these closing years of the nineteenth century. Governments over there have but very rarely the long terms of power to which we have become used in Canada. There a general election usually brings about a change of government. Here we continue a party in power until success in winning elections becomes monotonous. So that it may be, and probably will be, that five or six years hence another appeal to the people may give the present decimated opposition the power and control which have been now so rudely snatched from their grasp. It is partly owing to the comparative sparseness of our population that this difference between the political history of Canada and Britain exists. Where there are so many millions crowded closely together as in the United Kingdom, it is much easier to arouse the masses against a government, and the task of an opposition seeking to gain power is proportionately easier than here. The influences of power and patronage are also proportionately greater in Canada than in England.

It is also to be remembered that a change of government in the mother country involves no change in the fiscal policy of the country. Both parties are free traders, and what is of some consequence to us, both parties have now a kindly feeling and an equal disposition to do justice to the colonies. It is therefore to most persons in Canada a matter of small consequence whether a Rosebery or a Salisbury is, for the time the first minister.

THE SESSION CLOSED.

Parliament has closed its long and anxious deliberations at Ottawa, and the members of the two houses are returning to their homes. It was the fifth session of the sixth parliament of the Dominion, and it was characterised by some peculiar and unusual features. One of these is found in the fact that the fifth session came very near not being held at all. No longer ago than the first of March it seemed improbable that parliament would be dissolved than that it would be called to meet. And, stranger still, it has been officially determined that this same parliament shall meet again not later than 4th January next. This coming sixth session is something unique in our parliamentary annals, though quite constitutional, too, in its way.

The session just closed was not noteworthy for important legislation. There was the usual rendering of financial statements and departmental reports; the usual budget speech and debate following thereon, and the usual voting of moneys for the various public services. The new measures adopted were not of unusual interest, nor was there anything new or ingenious in the attacks made by the opposition upon the administration or its policy. On every test vote the government was sustained by handsome majorities. In fact, considering the flourish of trumpets indulged in by the Liberals at the opening over their recent successes in Vercheres and Antigonish the session was a much tamer one in point of political warfare than might have been expected. There were, however, frequent skirmishes, in which the ministerial forces well maintained their reputation and prestige.

The one event of really absorbing interest during the months of sitting was the cabinet crisis over the Manitoba school question. For a time the excitement was intense and Messrs. Caron, Angers and Ouimet appear to have tendered their resignations as ministers. But in the end only Mr. Angers retired from the administration and his colleagues from Quebec province resumed their official stations. It does not at present appear that the opposition gained any advantage from this incident, or that the ministerial party is less united at the close of the session than at its beginning.

Hon. Mr. Foster appears to have led the Commons with unexpected skill and ability, gaining some new laurels in this regard. Hon. Mr. Montague, by his brilliant defence of the ministerial policy and his telling onslaught upon his opponents in the budget debate fully justified his selection for a cabinet position. On the Liberal side Sir Richard Cartwright and Hon. L. H. Davies were the most effective fighters, while others, formerly prominent appear to have dropped to the rear. There were few other salient features of the session to note.

INFORMATION FOR THE PEOPLE.

Some Benefits of New Brunswick Provincial Sunday School Association.

1. By organization it has conserved forces not previously used. Some of the best men and women of each denomination have by association strengthened each other and extended their good influence beyond and without regard to denominational lines, yet bringing back more efficiency to their own denominational work.

2. An Executive Committee meets quarterly, before which all its operations come for careful plan and review. This is composed of well-known Christian laymen and ministers, who bring to this committee work the same wisdom and economy used in their own matters of church and business.

3. It has gathered statistics from the whole field and shown to the Christian public facts and conditions not previously known by the churches.

4. It has promoted in every possible way the organization of many new Sunday-Schools and witnessed a growth from 563 schools in 1884 to 963 in 1894. During the winter of 1894-5 some new schools have been opened and well sustained. This was never done before organization.

Our last report shows schools 963. Teachers and Officers 6,370. Pupils 48,241. Total in Sunday schools 54,511.

5. The vast amount of voluntary labor by provincial, county and parish officers cannot be fully tabulated.

For a number of years it has annually brought one or more leading Bible, Sunday-school educators into this province thereby greatly helping teachers and others.

For several years it has sustained a General Field Secretary, whose time is spent in organizing and promoting every possible phase of better Sunday-school work.

This officer (Rev. A. Lucas) is well known and his work is hailed with delight by young and old, teachers and scholars, pastors and people throughout the provinces. The number of his services last year aggregated 400. These consisted of sermons, addresses, conventions, mass meetings, lessons taught and reviewed questions answered and anything by which Sunday-school work through the province could be advanced. For this work he travelled 9,495 miles during 1894. One pleasing feature is that pastors more and more recognize the Secretary's visits as always promotive of the best interests of their people.

6. By a thorough system of parish and County Conventions a continuous education reaches out to the weakest places for their development into strength. By its system of Normal lessons it seeks to educate teachers in the Word and Work. By Home Class Department and House to House Visitation, with International Bible Readings, it aims to reach out to each home to enlist all in Bible study and church work.

7. It shares in publishing THE International Evangel, a foremost educative monthly of thirty-six pages. Thus its official organ is doing good wherever it goes.

It also publishes an Annual report of over one hundred pages, and sends the same to all subscribers of one dollar and upwards.

8. Its history has been one continual growth in God's blessing, in usefulness and in the favour of the people. By it the weakest schools no longer feel that they are uncared for. Their workers have a cheerfulness not before seen.

9. This work is supported by voluntary offerings of the people, and appeals to all who have a benevolent interest in the welfare of their own province.

The blueberries are reported scarce.

The rails are partly put on the new bridge, but there is yet no sign of the Man of War.

Several of our farmers who left in the spring for the States, are crying to come back in the fall to farm.

A grand picnic will be held on the church ground on the 7th and 8th of August, in aid of the church now under construction. It is five years since we had a picnic here and a large crowd is expected. Nothing will be spared by the committee to make it enjoyable and comfortable. The foundation of the church is ready to receive the frame which is all on the spot. The work is under the direction of Mr. Fidele Daigle. The plans have been drawn by our pastor, Rev. A. Eberube, and by this he has saved over one hundred dollars to the Parish.

He prayed for a Wheel.

The little fellow was taught to believe that prayers were answered, and so when the bicycle fever struck him he concluded to pray for a wheel. In the firm belief that the prayers would be answered, he counted the days intervening until the recurrence of his birthday, an occasion upon which he hoped to have his prayer answered. His mother meant to see that the bicycle was produced, but she heard of so many accidents that she was fearful of seeing such a wee little fellow riding a bicycle, and so she purchased a tricycle and placed it outside the little fellow's room.

On the last opportunity for supplication prior to his birthday, the little fellow grew piteously eloquent in his plea and promised to be painfully good if the wheel was delivered. In the morning jumping out of bed, into the hall in search of the wheel he found a tricycle outside his door. For a moment his face wore a puzzled look, and then in tones of deepest disgust he waited, "O Lord don't you know the difference between a bicycle and a tricycle?"
