RISE AND FALL OF TAMMANY.

The Oldest Political Body in America.

In the city of New York way back in 1789, a party of men, under the leadership of one William Mooney, formed an organization, which in those days they were pleased to call the "Columbian Order, or the Society of Tammany." The body was, primarily, a social one, and was established in opposition to the so-called aristocratic Society of the Cincinnati, which at that time, as now was an organization of no mean proportions. The Tammany Society took its title from a noted Indian chief of the Delaware tribe who flourished in the days of the American Revolution. The Indian traditions were adhered to to a great extent, and the chairman of the organization was called the Grand Sachem. The remaining officers were thirteen in number, designed to represent the thirteen original States. The members were known as braves and their place of meeting a wigwam.

In 1800 the majority of the body was in sympathy with Aaron Burr who in that year made his memorable campaign for vice-President of the United States under the banner of the anti-Federalist. The Tammany braves threw themselves vigorovsly into the political turmoil and did much toward gaining Burr his victory. For a time Tammany allied itself with De Witt Clinton, but they soon deserted him and came to be recognized as the regular Democratic faction. In 1804 the Society was incorporated and the name Tammany Society assumed. From that time to the present it has been an important factor in the politics of both New York State and its greatest prosperity. In those years it practically controlled every dollar of public money and every office within the city. William M. Tweed was the Grand Sachem or "Boss" of the robber ring. Between the years 1869 and 1871 Tweed and his gang stole no less than $12,000,000 of the city's money. In 1871 through the lucky disclosures of a clerk in the city comptroller's office the tax-payers were at last able to remedy an evil which heretofore they had been powerless against. Tweed and his gang of looters were at once forced out of office, the majority of them. however, getting out of the country before they could be imprisoned. Tammany Hall in this manner fell from both grace and power and its utter collapse was predicted by all. It hung to life, however, with a tenacity worthy of a better cause, most emphatically and agreeably cheered Miss Sadie E. body finally prevailed and the County Domocracy was wiped out of existence "Boss" Kelly ruled Tammany and New York with an iron hand until he died.

Major-General Hancock was the Democratic nominee for President of the United States in 1880. The nomination Tammany opposed and the braves put their shoulders to the wheel to bring about his defeat and succeeded. In 1884 the same tactics were tried against President Cleveland, but this time Tammany was defeared, for in spite of their opposition "the man of destiny" carried New York and the Presidency.

Upon John Kelly's death, Richard Croker, an able lieutenant of the former Boss, was made the Grand Sachem of the tribe. Under Croker's administration Tammany prospered. All went well until about a year ago, when the agitation which overthrew them at the recent elections began to make itself felt. Shrewd Croker saw that an earthquake was brewing in which Tammany was to be shaken to its foundation and he wisely resigned his "boss-ship" on the plea of ill-health and went to Europe. His place was taken by William J. Martin and then the crash Tammany Hall, in a great measure, owes its strength to the peculiar political complexion of the State of New York. The balance of power, in national affairs, lying as it coes within its borders, makes such an organization powerful beyond the ordinary conception of the term. For years past New York has held the position of the pivotal state of the Union, and with its deciding votes controlled the destinies of the contesting parties. Making terms with Tammany-controlling as it did over a hundred thousand votes—was a necessity in order to be victorious. The perfect organization with which Tammany has been equipped and with a General Committee of over 1500 members and delegates in each district and precinct of the city, combined with the proceeds of every important office within its limits as well as many more in the State Legislature, made it a body to be feared by both friend and foe.

It was crushed at the last election a few weeks ago when Dr. Charles Parkhurst's crusade proved victorious.

DEC. 31.-A happy New Year to all. We are now having our first treat of sleighing, and judging from the beaming faces of some of our young people who have very properly taken advantage of it, it must be immensely appreciated.

Messrs. Ben and Walter Murray and D. Brewster had a very narrow escape from drowning early Christmas morning. As they were returning on skates, from Midnight Mass, they skated into the open channel of the river about two miles above the bridge. Ben, who was the first to fall into the water, was also the first to get out and showed great courage and presence of mind in rescuing his friends. Lying flat on the ice, he slid within reach of them, Sandy paid us a flying visit, but a smile when he helped out first one and then the other. With their clothes frozen in a solid mass the young men proceeded on their way home some two miles further We scarcely could recognize our amiable on, but Walter who is but a lad, had to remain at a neighboring house till morning. The young men are out again, apparently none the worse of their cold bath.

Not a Drunkard's Paradise.

Renowned though Switzerland be for the freedom and democracy of its institutions, there is no country in the world that is so drastic and severe in the treatment of inebriates. The laws vary in detail in the twenty-one cantons, but in their essential principles they are very similar and provide for the punishment not only of those persons who indulge in strong drink to excess, but also of the people who supply the liquor in question. Drunk ard are visited with penalties amounting to a maximum of a year's imprisonment with hard labor and three years' interdiction from exercising the franchise and from the purchase of any alcoholic drink, while the dealers and innkeepers who permit their customers to become intoxicated or who furnish ' interdicted ' persons, are likewise sentenced to the payment of heavy fines, imprisonment and the forfeiture of license. Altogether, Switzerland can scarcely be considered a drunkard's
