DR. CHASE'S OINTMENT
CURES
ITCHING PILES, ECZEMA, SALT RHEUM

E. J. Leslie, representing Gannong Bros., St. Stephen, N. B., says: "Chase's Ointment cured me of a very stubborn case of Itching Piles. Tried everything advertised, several physicians' prescriptions without permanent relief. Know of several cases of Itching Piles it has cured."

BRADFORD, JULY 4, 1894.—I consider Dr. Chase's ointment a God send to anyone suffering from piles, itching scrofulous or any kind of skin disease. Its soothing effects are felt from the first application.—J. M. ROGERS.

George Chester's Mistake.

"Charity, kind sir! My poor children are starving!"

The speaker was a thinly clad woman, who shivered in the winter blast, for it was December, and the keen, frosty air penetrated even the warm garments of the rich. The gentleman addressed was a man of perhaps thirty-five, a rich and prosperous man, who hoped soon to become still more rich and prosperous through an alliance with the fair girl at his side.

"Poor woman!" said Edith Mortimer, compassionately. "I have left my purse at home. George, I am sure you will relieve her distress."

"Of course I will, my darling. Here, poor woman, take that, and may it do you good!"

As he spoke he drew from his vest pocket a two-dollar bill, and put it into the extended hand of the applicant. The poor woman's heart bounded with joy, for she had hoped for but twenty-five cents at the best, and two dollars seemed to her positive wealth.

"Heaven bless your generous heart," she exclaimed, with heartfelt gratitude. "Thank you," said George Chester, graciously.

Edith Mortimer awarded him with a beaming smile.

"I am glad you gave the poor creature so much," she said. "I like generosity. I don't think I could respect or esteem a mean man."

"We think alike on that point, my darling," said Chester. "I never can refuse to give, even if I suspect the object may be unworthy. It makes me happy to make others happy."

Another beaming glance from Edith. "I love you all the better for that, dear George," she said in a low voice.

"On the whole," thought Chester, "my two dollars are a good investment, though I can't help grudging it to the beggar. When Edith becomes Mrs. Chester, and I get hold of her hundred thousand dollars, she shant give many two-dollar bills to beggars. For the present, it's policy to be generous."

Of course, Edith could not read the thoughts of the man at her side. She believed him to be a genuine philanthropist, while, in reality, he was a mean, selfish, hard-hearted man, yet with tact enough to overcome these traits for the sake of making a favorable impression upon the heart of the heiress.

Edith Mortimer was an orphan, and the absolute mistress of a hundred thousand dollars; no small fortune for a girl of nineteen. But her fortune was by no means her chief attraction. She was beautiful, sweet-tempered, accomplished and her heart was animated by the most generous charity. She had a regular list of pensioners, and would have found it impossible to refuse an applicant who was in need. Doubtless, she had often given to unworthy objects, but such mistakes rebounded to the credit of those who make them.

As Edith said, she would have found it impossible to respect or esteem a mean man. Thus far, George Chester had succeeded in concealing his real character from her, but the time was coming when it would be revealed. Whenever he was with her he gave liberally to any who asked for charity, but at his store he would have repulsed them with hard and bitter words. He kept a large clothing store in Boston, but Edith, who lived on Mount Vernon street, had never been there and knew absolutely nothing of him in his business relations.

Of course, there were many who courted the favor of the young and beautiful heiress, but there was only one who came near being the rival of the successful suitor. This was Doctor Goodwin, a young physician, who had recently established himself in the city, and was having a hard struggle to get into a lucrative practice, being poor and without powerful friends. But he was essentially noble, of good figure, with a frank, open face, and unusually able and intelligent. Success with him was only a matter of time.

When he saw the rich trader preferred to him, he quietly withdrew, disappointed, but too honorable to attempt to reverse Edith's decision now that it appeared to be duly made.

It was made, and the wedding-day was about to be fixed, when something occurred which quite changed the position of affairs.

Edith was walking on the Tremont street mall in Boston Common, when her attention was attracted to a girl of about her own age who was sitting on one of the stone seats placed there for the use of staid pedestrians. The girl was plainly dressed, and in her face and attitude was such an air of despondency that Edith, whose heart was full of compassion for the wretched, felt herself constrained to stop and speak to her.

"Are you not well?" she asked, in a low sympathetic voice.

The girl, who was very thinly and poorly clad, looked up.

"Yes," she answered, "I am well."

It is something which I can remedy. Don't think me inquisitive, but I really want to help you if you will let me."

The girl answered gratefully.

"Thank you for your kindness. It does me good for I stand in need of kind words."

"Tell me then of your trouble," and Edith, in her seal skin sacque, sat down beside the plainly dressed girl.

"My mother and I live together," explained the girl. "We are very poor, and mother is an invalid, unable to do much. We have nothing to live upon except what I can earn by my needle."

"That must be very little."

"Yes, it is very little; but I have been defrauded out of that little. It is too hard."

"Tell me about it. Is it possible that any one could be so mean as to cheat you out of the little you earn in that hard way?"

"I will tell you how it happened. A week since, I got a bundle of vests to make for a large house. The pay was very small. By working early and late I could earn about twenty-five cents a day."

"Is it possible? I never heard of such oppression," said Edith, indignantly.

"Well, I finished the half-dozen, and this morning took them around to the store. Instead of paying the money, the proprietor, a rich man, said roughly that they were not well done, and he could only pay fifteen cents a piece for them. If I would take that he would give me more work. I knew it was all a pretense to cheat me out of ten cents on each vest, for I am an experienced vestmaker, and these were made as well as usual."

"And did you take the money my poor friend?" asked Edith.

"What could I do? There was no money to buy our dinner. I had to take it, but I know that it is impossible for us to get along on that paltry sum. I see nothing for us but starvation."

"Cheer up! I am rich! I will help you!" said the heiress. "But tell me the name of this mean wretch who defrauded you."

"It is George Chester."

"Who?" exclaimed Edith, startled and surprised.

"George Chester. I hear he is engaged to a wealthy heiress, but I don't think such a man can prosper."

"I must look into this," said Edith, quickly, her face flushed. "It is more important to me than you know, come to my house."

The girl accompanied her home, and presently the heiress, who had changed garments with the poor girl for a brief space, emerged into the street and made her way to the store of George Chester. She was so muffled up that her face could not be seen.

"What do you want?" asked a salesman, roughly.

"To see Mr. Chester," answered Edith in a low voice.

"He is busy. He can't see a girl like you."

"I have something important to say to him."

George Chester, on being told this, came forward.

"Well, girl, what do you want of me?" he asked, rudely.

"You gave me only fifteen cents for some vests I brought here this morning," said Edith, in an assumed voice.

"What of that? They were poorly made."

"I need the money for my mother. I worked hard, and I am sure the vests were well made."

"Look here! I can't be troubled with you," said Chester, roughly. "I gave you all the work was worth."

"My mother will starve."

"Let her starve, then. It's no business of mine."

USEPELEE ISLAND WINES FOR DEBILITY NATURE'S TONIC.

E. G. SCOVILL, AGENT PELEE ISLAND GRAPE JUICE. MARION 15th, 1893.
St. JOHN, N. B.

DEAR Sir.—My family have received great benefits from the use of the PELEE ISLAND GRAPE JUICE during the past four years. It is the best tonic and sedative for debility, nervousness and weak lungs we have ever tried. It is much cheaper and pleasanter than medicines. I would not be without it in the house.
