SICK HEADACHE.

A Simple Household Remedy for this Distressing Affliction.

Obtainable at a cost of a cent a Dose at any Drug Store. Price Prepared from a Prescription by Dr. Chase, Author of the Well-known Recipe Book.

Mrs. G. Bird writes from Hariston, Ont. under date Sept. 15th, 1894: "While on a visit to Toronto, and taking in the sights of the exhibition, I was taken very ill with sick headache and dizziness, a life-long complaint of mine, and I thought I would have to take to my bed, as I have always had to do when my head is bad. I was also very much troubled with a very tired feeling when arising in the morning. Hearing of Dr. Chase's Kidney Liver Pills, thought I would try a box, and I must say 'tis indeed a wonderful medicine in pill form, for after taking one pill my head felt better and before I had taken half a box was entirely cured and had no return of stomach trouble." Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills are put up in yellow wrappers which bear the photograph and signature of Dr. A. W. Chase. None other are genuine. They are an honest remedy and, as one man puts it, "are half a family medicine chest."

When Jimmy Comes Home From School.

When Jimmy comes from school at four,
Jerusalem! how things begin
To whirl and buzz and bang and spin

And brighten up from roof to floor!
The dog that all day long has lain
Upon the back porch, wags his tail
And leaps and barks and begs again

The last scrap in the dinner pail,
When Jimmy comes from school
The cupboard latches clink a tune,
And mother from her knitting stirs
To tell that hungry boy of hers
That supper will be ready soon.

And then a slab of pie he takes,
A cookie and a quince or two,
And for the breezy barnyard break,
Where everything cries, "How d'you do?"
When Jimmy comes from school

The rooster on the garden fence
Struts up and down and crows and crows
As if he knows, or thinks he knows,
He, too, is of some consequence.

The guinea joins the chorus, too,
And just beside the window-sill
The red bird, swinging out of view
On his high perch begins to trill,
When Jimmy comes from school.

When Jimmy comes from school, take care!
Our hearts begin to throb and quake
With life and joy, and every ache
Is gone before we are aware.

The earth takes on a richer hue,
A softer light falls on the flowers,
And overhead a brighter blue
Seems bent above this world of ours,

—By James Newton Matthew.

Hands and Ankles Raw.

For years I have been a great sufferer from itchy skin trouble and salt rheum. My hands and ankles were literally raw. The first application of Dr. Chase's Ointment allayed the burning, itching sensation. One box and a half entirely cured me. It is also instant relief for chilblains.

CURING A COQUETTE.

"And so you love me?" she said, and she pulled the petals off a rose, and after holding them for a moment in the palm of her hand blew them off into the sea.

"I believe I have made some remarks that would lead any ordinary sane person to come to that conclusion," I replied, repressing by means of my thumb and forefinger the crease in my trousers, which had become somewhat obliterated during the process of my love making.

"Of course," with a somewhat dry smile, "you want me to confess that I have loved you right along; tell you that I never knew what true love was until now, etc., etc."

"Oh! no; that would spoil it."

"Oh! and so you don't want me to love you?" And the black-eyed little coquette ceased to smile and began to look a little puzzled.

"By no means. That would make my courtship, flirtation or whatever you choose to call it, a decidedly tame and ordinary affair. You must remember that I have not asked you to love me. I have simply aired my passionate and life long affections for you."

"And you ask no return?" The nonchalant, coquettish air began to fade away, the little foot began to tap nervously, after the fashion of heroines of cheap novels, and the signs of rising temper were beginning to be quite perceptible.

"Not the slightest," I answered, and having finished recasting my trousers I sat back in my chair, partly closed my eyes, placed the tips of my fingers together, and looking straight out to sea, began:

"To the ordinary creature love and desire are eternally united. Love of an article produces the desire to possess that article. Love of a coquette always produces the desire to claim that coquette as one's own particular property. Men cannot possess all that they are doomed to see and love. As a consequence it is truism that all men's lives are more or less unhappy. The happy man of the future is the one who will be able to separate love without asking a return. But I, am wearying you?"

She turned her head away quickly, but not before I saw in her eyes the glint of tears. I felt that if I could only keep it up a little longer I would conquer.

"No, please continue," she replied, looking the other way.

"Let me see; where was I? Oh, yes, this happy man is a creature of the far off future. In my small way I have attempted to separate the two. I love you and when I told you so I foolishly kissed you. I should not have done so, but you held your head in such a position that I felt that I can forgive myself on the ground that in so doing I acted almost involuntarily. As I was—"

"I thought I heard a sob, but I went on: "As I was saying I love you, but I do not want you to love me. That would be a serious discomfort to me, and would prevent my loving all the rest of the beauty of the world. True that I love—"

"One or two hysterical sobs. "You are a brute," she said, amid her tears, and then pushing me away from her side fled up the porch and disappeared in the house, slamming the door behind her.

I lit a cigar and smoked it in comfort. After six months misery I had conquered.

All this happened last summer. I left the next day for the West, exultant in the thought that I had cured the coquette and believing that a few months' meditation would have the effect of healing the wounds.

I returned last week. As I mounted the steps and rang the door bell my heart beat a little faster and there was a decided tremor about my knees, for Hawker's letter had mystified me greatly. "She inquires after you almost daily," he had written; "asks for your address, but following your instructions I have never given her any information."

With fear and trembling I was ushered into the parlor, and then awaited the arrival of my heroine, Morning Star.

There was a rustle of skirts on the stairway and the next moment she entered, as radiant and as fair as ever.

"Why, Jack, you've come back at last, have you? Where have you been? I have been trying to find out your address but could not succeed."

I was a little amazed at her cheerful countenance, but I said, sternly:

"I have come back with different ideas on love than I had when I went away."

"Have you? I'm so glad. I've changed too," and my heart thumped up and down as she looked down and shyly said, "I'm no longer a coquette."

"No longer a coquette; ah, my sweet dear, loving—"

"I reached out my arms, but she drew off and said:

"No, I'm no longer a coquette; I'm to be married to your friend Hawker the day after to-morrow. This is why he told you that you had better come home. I wanted to send you an invitation to the wedding, but he wouldn't give me your address."

She had been cured. And, alas, so was I—too well, but not wisely.

A Bad Man.

He is the man who does not sympathize with his wife at this season.

All the jokers, they are all men of course, picture the woes of man house-cleaning time.

But what about the women? Is it fun for them? You great, strong healthy men who kick because your comfort is a little disturbed. What about your wives? Don't you know that their more delicate organization suffers a hundred fold more? They have all the trouble and worry. It wears them out. And when they chance to be fretful you fly into a dreadful temper, perhaps.

Don't do it. Go down to the drug-store and get a supply of Hawker's nerve and stomach tonic, and take it home to your wife. It will make her healthy and strong and cheerful again. It is the greatest of all remedies for nervous prostration or general debility such as arises from overwork and worry. Hawker's nerve and stomach tonic is a perfect nerve restorer and invigorator, and blood and flesh builder, as well as a valuable stomach tonic and aid to digestion. It is especially adapted to the diseases peculiar to women, such as nervousness, nervous head-aches, neuralgia, hysteria, pale and sallow complexions, suppressions, anaemia, despondency, loss of memory, or any nerve weakness of heart or brain arising from worry overstrain of mind or body or excesses of any nature. It gives tone to the nerves and stomach, vigor to the mind and body, and strength to the blood restoring the bloom of health to the pale and delicate. It is for sale by all druggists and dealers at fifty cents a bottle or six bottles for $2.50, and is manufactured by The Hawker Medicine Co. (Ltd) St. John, N. B. and New York City.
