TURKISH POLICE.

THE SULTAN'S GUARDS A SET OF FRIGHTFUL BARBARIANS.

Dreadful Condition of the Prisons—Torture a Part of the Penal System—Criminals Killed by Degrees, Never Reformed.

The police force of Constantinople, like everywhere else in the Ottoman Empire, viewed from the standpoint of civilization, is a barbaric farce. It promotes outrage and suppresses peace.

There are about 3,000 police in Constantinople, but they are so badly organized and managed that they are of little or no use.

Years ago the Constantinople policeman was picturesque, and that is about all. Until a comparatively short time ago it was not thought necessary to police the city in daytime, except near the great bazars, where rows between buyer and seller sometimes occurred.

into the same ward with women of the most depraved habits.

The food furnished to prisoners is absolutely inadequate. It consists of just two pounds of black bread a day.

Torture in the prisons is a science. Executioners delight in finding out how much pain can be inflicted without destroying life.

It is a conceded fact that the present mode of execution in Turkey is by beheading and by strangling the victim to death with strong cords.

down into a great gulf, which was filled with sharp steel spears, upon which the victim was impaled.

If the poor wretch was fortunate enough to fall upon one of the spears and pierce a vital point, the agony was quickly over.

As if this style of butchery was not enough, the Turks were very fond of driving thorns in the flesh of the victims. These thorns were not the little tiny spears like those found on the average American rosebush.

When this awful torture was over the victim was dragged to a funeral pyre and was burned at the stake, with all the horrid torments of a slow fire, so that the criminal's agony could be prolonged.

A common mode of punishment was to strip a criminal naked and then tie him with his face to the sky so he could not move.

dungeon, but are allowed to loaf out here in the courtyard.

"A long, gloomy passage opened out of one end of the courtyard, and thus I entered encompassed by the concourse of villains and with no other escort than the little bow-legged warden of the gate.

"What stuffily faces most of them were! Faces, the expression of which—wolfish, ferocious, hungry for blood, sardonic, utterly devilish—made the flesh creep.

"And what, think you, was his burden? It consisted of a mass of heavy iron links, knotted up into a great clump and fastened to the man's ankles.

Considerable discussion has been aroused in religious and medical circles as to the advisability, from a sanitary point of view, of a large number of persons partaking of the wine from one cup.

The individual cup in use in many churches has received considerable opposition because of its apparent exclusiveness and the radical change from a belief in one cup, which long years of usage seems to have rendered conclusive.

From a medical standpoint the common cup is looked upon as a means of transmitting disease. The bacilli of consumption may lurk in the wine, or the lips may become inoculated with the most dreaded of all diseases—cancer.

From a medical standpoint the common cup is looked upon as a means of transmitting disease. The bacilli of consumption may lurk in the wine, or the lips may become inoculated with the most dreaded of all diseases—cancer.

A minister in Boston has invented what he calls a revolving cup. This is a large silver cup into which is fitted a smaller cup and the space between the outer and inner cup holds the wine.

The inner cup is made in series of sections which revolve by means of a small crank. When one section is emptied the crank automatically fills it with fresh wine.

Still another has been invented, having the rim in six large scallops, representing a double trinity. Each communicant uses a different scallop and after six have partaken, the rim is carefully wiped, and passed on to the next.

The wine can be freely drawn into the mouth, but not one drop returns to the cup when suction is removed. It is easily cleaned and, as pure silver and glass is used, no unpleasant taste is communicated.

It comes in two styles, both of which are here represented. The silver syphon is a small tube about 5 inches in length and not larger around than a straw.

The plan of the inventor is that each communicant shall be provided with a syphon, and the idea of unity—the same cup and the same wine being used—will still be preserved.
