

Dear Fellow Workers:

The 11th annual session of the Kent Co. Sunday School Association will be held this year in the Presbyterian Church, Kingston, on the kind invitation of the pastor. The first session will be on Tuesday, Sept 8th at 2 p. m. The convention will continue till Wednesday evening.

Now we have reports from 41 schools this present year. Out of every school represented in the Convention. Perhaps this is too much to expect but the executive has been working for a large Convention. The one which met in Buc Supts. and teachers appoint your delegates next Sunday—remember two delegates besides the Supts—he or she must be there. Drop a card to Miss Minnie Bowser, Kingston, at least one week before Convention saving you will be there. Don't fail to do this. First be sure you can come. Then drop the card.

All pastors are expected, invited and exhorted to be present and testify their interest. They are wanted to take part in the discussions.

Will pastors speak of the Convention next Sunday and urge the Supts. to appoint delegates immediately? Supts. appoint some of your best workers, those who have a real interest in the work.

Teachers talk this Convention up. Will the general public on Sept. 8th and 9th assist in packing St. Andrew's Church, Kingston, to the doors.

Entertainment will be provided by the kind friends of Kingston for all delegates. Mrs. Capt. Gordon, Mrs. Hazen Russ and Miss Minnie Bowser are the efficient entertainment committee.

Again—send a card to Miss Minnie Bowser, Kingston, Kent Co., as soon as you are appointed delegate. And when you come bring a line from your Supt. saving you are appointed.

Programmes will be published soon. Yours very truly F. W. MURRAY, County Secretary. Bass River, July 23rd, 1896.

Makes Twenty-four Dollars a Week Dyeing with Diamond Dyes.

A constant user of the world-famed Diamond Dyes writes as follows about his success with them:

"I have been using your Diamond Dyes for seven years. I can only say they are the best on the market. I have made as high as twenty-four dollars a week in dyeing, and could not give satisfaction unless I used the Diamond Dyes. I would not be without them, for when I am, I consider I am without money."

MORAL: Diamond Dyes are the best and most profitable. Carefully avoid what some dealers call just as good.

Scottish Courtship.

A shy young man of Scotland for fourteen years had wooed the lassie of his heart. One night Jamie—for that was the young man's name—called to see Jennie, and there was a terrible look about his eyes, just as there is sometimes when they've made up their minds to pop the question. And Jamie came in and sat down by the fire just as he had done every Tuesday and Friday night for fourteen years, and he talked of the weather, and the cattle, and the crops, and the stock market, I was going to say—but no; they didn't talk about that. And finally Jamie said:

"I've known you for a long time." "Yes, Jamie," she said. "And—I've thought I'd always like to know you, Jennie." "Yes, Jamie." "And so I've bought—a lot—Jennie." "Yes, Jamie." "So—that—when—"

"We're dead we can lay our bones together." The fool had gone and bought a lot in a graveyard, but Jennie was not discouraged. She knew her man well—after fourteen years she ought to—and so she said gently. "Jamie." "Yes, Jennie." "Don't you think 't would be better to lay our bones together while we're yet alive?"

Editor Review:

DEAR SIR.—In looking over the last issue of your paper I see that the Band are going to erect a platform in the Court House square. Would it not be advisable before doing so, to think over the matter a little carefully? The citizens of this town have contributed very generously towards the company, and they should be considered. No doubt the square is a pretty place for the purpose, but is it not too much out of the way? Could not a more central place be pitched upon, for instance, that vacant lot of G. V. McInerney's or W. W. Short's, on the opposite side of the street? If they fail in getting either of those places, perhaps Mr. A. Loggie would give them permission to build a platform alongside of the Levi store, a lovely place, and I have no doubt that ten to one will go to hear them play in any one of the three places mentioned above, than will walk away up to the Court House.

A CITIZEN. Richibucto, July 25th, 1896.

Anticosti.

The apparently superfluous island in the gulf has at last found an owner, in the person of M. Menier, the Parisian millionaire of chocolate fame. Anticosti has a peculiar history. Jacques Cartier discovered it, and a subsequent visitor took pains to name it Ascension Island. The Indians tried to pronounce the name. But they could approach no nearer to it than Naticotee. From Naticotee to Anticosti was an easy jump, and so in process of time Ascension came to be known by the appellation derived from the Indian. When in old days European Royalties were in the habit of giving colonial territory to favourites, the Crown of France, following the rule, awarded Anticosti to Joliet. The happy recipient laboured with his white elephant—for the place was altogether useless to him—until he died. After the cession to Great Britain the claim which his successors had upon the island was superseded by a grant of the territory to English families. As the Magdalens went to the Coffin family, so Anticosti went to wealthy English owners, whose names are now forgotten. They, however, sold out to a company under the title of the Governor and Company of Anticosti (limited). This company had ideas similar to those of the East India Company, or the Hudson Bay Company. But its expectations were not realizable. An effort was made to settle the island about thirty years ago, and pioneers were taken thither from the Province of Quebec under a regularly constituted management. Town sites were located; counties to the number of twenty were marked off; and vacant lots were for sale. But the attempt failed, crops being bad and the climate severe. News speedily reached Quebec that the settlers were starving, and a rescue expedition was fitted out to bring everybody back. Since then the island has been in the market, and now it appears M. Menier has purchased it en bloc. It is rather unusual to find one man in possession of a territory a hundred and forty miles long and thirty miles wide. Such, however, is the position of M. Menier. He is monarch of all he surveys; his right there is none to dispute; from the centre all round to the sea he is lord of the fowl and the brute. His lordship over man is affirmed by the establishment of a regular colony under a Governor, who has a code of laws of M. Menier's production to guide him. As regards the brute creation, he seems to have enormous possessions, for Anticosti is rich in wild animals, in birds and in fish. The place in fact is a hunter's paradise, and that is why the chocolate king has bought it. M. Menier is going to govern his colony under the laws of Canada, for the sovereignty belongs to us, and is vested for local purposes in the Province of Quebec. He anticipates no conflict of jurisdiction. But, of course, if settlement progresses under his auspices it is easy to understand that the settlers will want to own the soil they rescue and cultivate. Then, perhaps, unless M. Menier pursues a policy more liberal than that of the owner of the Magdalens, or that followed by the original grantees of Prince Edward Island, we shall find ourselves face to face with "a question."

Royal Wedding.

LONDON, July 22.—All the city is en fete to-day, the occasion being the marriage of Princess Maud, daughter of the Prince of Wales, and Prince Charles of Denmark. The wedding has been long discussed and as all the Royal family are favorable to it, the greatest send off possible is given the bride. The wedding took place at the Chapel of Buckingham in the presence of all the members of the Royal families of Britain and Denmark. The bridal trousseau is described as beautiful, stylish, dainty. It is announced with ostentatious patriotism that the outfit of the bride has been for the most part made by British firms. Ireland has furnished the linens, the laces and the poplins; Scotland the wools and the wraps; while England, especially London, has done the rest. Following the fashion set by Her Majesty, and adopted by her daughters and grand-daughters, the wedding dress has been made at Spitalfields, and is of white satin, ivory in tone and with silvery sheen. The bodice is cut low, as is the custom at the royal weddings, the square décolletage being trimmed with folds of mousseline de sole and trails of orange blossoms, jessamine and myrtle flowers with here and there a dark green leaf peeping through. Below the satin on the bodice is drawn downward, a cross figure back and front, terminating on the left side in a deep cincture, delicately embroidered in silver and brilliants. Short sleeves are arranged in seven snowy frills of chiffon with lines of bridal flowers drawn down between them. The skirt is plain of lustrous satin, with ruche of chiffon, orange blossoms, myrtle and jessamine around the hem. The train is in one with skirt, about four yards and one half long, and fastens at the left side with bows of chiffon, and trails on the snowy flowers passing through them. A bridal veil of old lace will be worn off the face, as all English royal brides wear it. The orders included many orders which the bride is entitled to wear.

The Modesty of a Great Scientist.

Under the heading "The Humility of a Great Man," The Electrical World, in an editorial note, calls attention to the singular modesty displayed by Lord Kelvin (Sir William Thomson) in his address at the jubilee celebration given at Glasgow to commemorate his half-century tenure of the chair of natural philosophy in the university at that place. It has always been noticeable that great knowledge generally results in showing to its possessor more clearly his relative ignorance, and that the depth of the attainments of one who professes to know all about some subject may safely be questioned; and this instance is but one more illustration of the fact. Says the notice in question:

"With the full reports at hand of the Jubilee given in honor of Lord Kelvin we are compelled to add still another comment of admiration for England's greatest scientist. Seldom, indeed, is such honor bestowed upon an individual or received with more unaffected modesty and simplicity. He did not dwell upon the advances made in science and invention during his tenure of the Chair of Natural Philosophy at the University of Glasgow neither did he think that he deserved credit for the work which he had accomplished. 'One word,' he said, 'characterizes the most strenuous of the efforts for the advancement of science that I have made perseveringly during fifty-five years. That word is failure. I know no more of electric and magnetic force, or of the relation between ether, electricity, and ponderable matter, or of chemical affinity, than I knew and tried to teach to my students of natural philosophy fifty years ago in my first session as professor. Something of sadness must come of failure, but in the pursuit of science, inborn necessity to make the effort brings with it much of the certaminis gaudia and saves the naturalist from being wholly miserable, perhaps even allows him to be fairly happy in his daily work.' Such was Lord Kelvin's estimate of the aid which he had rendered in the advancement of science. He confessed that the problems which he had set out to fathom still remained unsolved and that his ambitions had resulted in failure. He still believed, however, that the time will come when the dark side of physical science shall be made bright and clear, in another generation if not in the present. Few men could have passed through such a demonstration without the feeling of a personal triumph and self-conscious pride. We do not wonder that Lord Kelvin retains in the English heart such an affectionate esteem, and we are glad to pay tribute to one possessing such remarkable qualities."

Weak

Worn out, nervous women, receive criticism where they should have sympathy. They cannot help being nervous, if their blood is impure.

When the blood fails to feed the nerves upon proper nourishment what can you expect but nervous prostration, debility and nervous headaches? If the cause is found in impure blood the cure must be in making the blood pure. This is just what Hood's Sarsaparilla does, and it has proved the true nerve tonic because it is the true blood purifier, and the solace, comfort and defender of thousands of housewives, teachers, clerks and other sufferers of both sexes. Just read this letter:

"I think it is my duty to tell what Hood's Sarsaparilla has done for me and my family. Two years ago I was in a weak, nervous condition and had dreadful palpitations or jumping of my heart, followed by sinking spells, which would last for several minutes. Sometimes it would seem as though I would never come out of them. I was treated by the best physicians, but only for a little time did they help me. I seemed to be growing worse instead of better. I would often seem hungry, but when I ate, no matter how little, it would cause me such misery that I was often wicked enough to wish myself dead. I had that languid, all-gone feeling and suffered awful distress in my stomach. I had given up all hopes of ever being well, when my mother wished me to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. I consented, to please her, and before I had taken the whole of one bottle I could see I was improving, and soon was indeed very much better. Its effects have been truly wonderful and I hope this letter may be the means of helping other suffering men and to try Hood's Sarsaparilla and be benefited by it. We have used Hood's Pills in our family and find them very excellent, especially for constipation. We give Hood's medicines great praise, and if anyone complains of feeling badly, I say 'You should take Hood's and only Hood's.'" MRS. KITTIE SMITH, 326 Dane Street, Waterloo, Iowa. Remember that
