Bill and Polly.

By D. V. Lucas, D. D.
"Well, I know a feller might take a glass too much with a friend, you know, but I don't care anything about it; I don't want it; I ain't got no hankerin' after it. I'm not goin' down there to drink."

"Well, Bill, I know; I suppose that's all right, but if you only knowed how bad it makes me feel to have you come home that way. Now, Bill, just promise me, and I know you'll do what you promise, for you are a good feller—now, promise me, won't you, Bill?"

"Well, hold on; you needn't bile over quite so much. I believe any woman's got enough tears to run a saw-mill, if you can only git her started. Of course I'll promise you, if that'll do your old heart any good. I'm not goin' down there to drink; I don't care anything about it."

"Pon your soul, Bill! 'pon your word and honour?"

"Pon my soul, Polly; 'pon my word and honour. You know, Polly, you can bet on me every time. When I say a thing you know it's all right."

"All right, Bill. I'm so glad; I know you'll keep it. That's all right, Bill. I'll have a splendid supper ready when you get back to-night."

The little girl hears this conversation and, young as she is, she has come to know what it means. She climbs on his knee and says, "Papa, I'm distoin' to div you ten tisses, and you know, papa, if you don't drink any nasty whisty to-day I'm doin' to div you to-night more'n a hundred of de sweetest tisses I've dot."

"Papa, do you know what we're doin' to have for supper when you dit home to-night. I heard mamma say dis now out'n de tittun dere, we're doin' to have tustard and pussesves, and nice cake and some of dat new tea what de mamma bringed here yesterday, and mamma says dat she'll have de supper all ready when de tars tums in, and me and mamma's tumming down to de bottom of de lane to meet you; too; mamma says so, and I'll jist div you dreat lot my best tisses down at de date, you know, papa, and a dreat lot more when we dit done supper. Won't dat be jist jolly, papa?"

Bill loves his wife and little girl as much as any man ever loved anybody. Bill takes all the kisses he can get from them both.

Bill promises wife and child that he'll drink no whiskey or anything else that will give them any trouble.

Does he mean it? Mean it? No man ever meant it more than he.

Is he honest? There isn't an honest soul in your town. Before he is five miles away he grows an inch or two in his estimation of himself. He's glad the old girl made him promise. He'll let her see that he's a man of his word; that she needn't fret and worry about him. The dear old soul was right about that last time he was at Townton. He'd been ashamed of it ever since, even if he had not hal the courage to own up. But that's all right now. He'll let her see. He'll show her that he's a man of his word; that, so far as whiskey is concerned, he can take it or let it alone, just as he likes.

"Townton's next station, all change. Passengers for the West take the train on the right. For the South, the train on the left, second track." So says the brakeman. The conductor, "TOWNTON All change."

Bill hadn't got more than five steps on the platform, till he sees Tom, an old friend whom he has not met for ten years.

Tom gave a shout that was heard the whole length of the station, "Hello, Bill, old fellow, how are you? Well, Bill, my word, but it's good for sore eyes to see YOU. Why I thought you were dead. 'Pon my soul, somebody told me so. Bill, why didn't you answer that last letter I sent you, eh? Well, Bill, I declare, I had a thousand questions all cut and dried, to ask you, if I ever did meet you again, and now you've come on me so quick, I declare I can't think of one of 'em. How are all the folks? Is John Brown and Tom Jones there yet? How are they? Well, Bill, what times we used to have when we were boys!

"Do you ever go fishing now, Bill. Any trout left in the lake?"

"I say, Bill, there was not two other fellows in our town could catch so many fish as you and me, eh, Bill? How's Polly?"

"Got any kids, Bill? A girl? I'm ahead of you, old boy. I've got three, two girls and a boy."

"I tell you, Bill, the boy's full blood. A regular chip of the old block. It takes the hull of us to hold him."

"I say, Bill, come in and have somethin'."

The Electric Light

Is a matter of small importance compared with other applications of electricity. By this agency Polson's Nerviline is made to penetrate the most remote nerve—every bone, muscle and ligament is made to feel its beneficent power. Nerviline, pleasant to take, even by the youngest child, yet so powerfully far reaching in its work, that the most agonizing internal pain yields as if by magic. Nerviline relieves neuralgia instantly and for the speedy cure of nerve pains of every description it has no equal. Sold everywhere.

"Coo-ee-e."

This peculiar cry was one of the signals of the Australian blacks and was speedily adopted by the invading whites. The final "e" is a kind of prolonged screech and resounds for miles through the bush, thus enabling separated persons to ascertain their relative positions.

A popular story runs that two wealthy Australian squatters lost themselves in a London fog and were only reunited after a series of long coo-ee-es. Once, too, an audience in a London theater was much startled by hearing this awful cry. It was uttered by an Australian in the upper circle to an old colonial acquaintance in the pit.

On another occasion was this cry heard in London. A daring bushranger, named Garret, who had spent many Christmas days in prison, made his appearance in front of a bank in Ballarat and coolly posted up a notice to the effect that the place would be closed for an hour. He then terrorized the officials and got away with £6,000.

The authorities received information that Garret had been seen in London. A colonial detective was immediately dispatched to the mother country to capture him if possible.

One day he thought that he saw his man walking in the Strand, but, not being quite sure, he hit on the bright expedient of uttering a piercing coo-ee-e. The ordinary frequenters of the Strand stood fixed with astonishment, but Garret, acting on the spur of the moment and recognizing the familiar sound, hastened back and was promptly arrested.

He was taken back to Australia and sentenced to ten years' imprisonment.—Pearson's Weekly.

THE McCORD CASE.

His Disease Pronounced Diabetes and incurable—Given up by Himself and Friends—Cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills.

RICHMOND Jan. 20 (Special).—The talk of farmers and others in town is mostly about the astonishing cure of Wm. McCord, a farmer near here. His presence made a surance visible, and he said—"After the doctors pronounced my trouble Diabetes no one thought recovery possible. I was partially paralyzed, was nine months in bed and I ran down until I was a mere shell. When I commenced taking Dodd's Kidney Pills I stuck close to directions. One box helped me and nine boxes cured me. Am sixty years old and have lived here 40 years." Dodd's Kidney Pills are sold by all druggists and Dealers. Price, 50 cts. a box.

Ten counterfeiters have been captured by New York detectives. Among the prisoners is Nicolo Toranto, the alleged chief of the Mafia in the United States. When surprised all the men showed fight and drew revolvers, stilletos and razors upon the officers. At the headquarters of the gang were found a large number of counterfeit bills and correspondence with an agent of the gang in Baltimore and Philadelphia. One of the gang was also arrested in Steinway, L. I., and $20,000 in counterfeit money was found in his pockets.

A Caution! A Warning!

If, on blowing the nose in the morning, lumps and flakes are discharged colored with blood, especially one side, lose no time in applying a remedy. Catarrh of the very worst kind has become seated, the walls are sore and full of ulcers, and if not soon cured will be hard to cure and eradicate. "A stitch in time saves nine." Use Chase's Catarrh Cure.

"A NEW WRINKLE!"

What is SPONGE CREPON?

This question has been frequently asked.

SPONGE CREPON is the Ideal Interlining and is pronounced the BEST ARTICLE for the purpose that is manufactured, and no matter to what crushing it is subjected, if shaken out it will at once regain its former shape. It keeps the puffed sleeves and flare skirts in shape, and will be used altogether for an Interlining as long as fashion decrees the present sleeves and skirts. For sale by all the leading dry goods dealers throughout the Maritime Provinces.
