CHILDREN'S CORNER.

TWO RAINY DAYS.

The last dish was wiped and put on the shelf beside its shining companions, and Nettie Bower stood at the large window in the back of the kitchen looking out. The rain was pouring down, but an hour still remained before time to go to Sunday school, and by that time she hoped the shower would be over.

'Still it is not likely,' she said aloud; 'for 'Between twelve and two You'll see what it will do.'

It is half-past one now, and I am seeing what it will do.

'I know what I will do,' said her younger sister, coming from the dining-room carrying broom and dustpan. 'I'm going to stay at home.'

'Oh, Emma, surely not!'

'It's just pouring, Nettie. No one will go. I hope you will not risk your health by going out in such weather.'

'I don't consider it a risk. I've gone to Sunday-school and church many a time in the rain, and it has not hurt me. I believe the Lord will care for his own even if we risk, as we call it, our health to learn of him.'

'Perform a miracle!'

'It is not a miracle; it is only trusting to his care. Why, Emma, he must intend us to go to church and Sunday-school in the rain, or he would never send a rainy Sunday; for he does not want us to forsake the assembling of ourselves together at any time.'

'Are you willing for her to go, Aunt Martha?' Emma called.

'She is old enough to judge for herself,' came from the dining-room.

Mrs. Grayson, the aunt with whom the orphan girls lived, followed a moment later. She was tall and thin, a woman of few words, and they were sometimes sharp.

'It is a matter of conscience, Emma,' Nettie went on. 'I cannot feel that even a heavy rain is an excuse for absenting ourselves from the Lord's house when we are well.'

'I do,' Emma returned shortly.

'But you do go out in the rain. You went in a worse storm than this to a concert two weeks ago.'

'That's a different thing. We do not often have an opportunity of going to a concert.'

'Then because the Lord has given us freely the privilege of learning of him we may regard it lightly, and think nothing of losing a lesson? He has a message there for us to-day, a message that he will not repeat. If we will not go to hear it we will lose it.'

Emma ran out of the room, upstairs to her own room. A little later she heard the front door shut, and, looking out, she saw Nettie, well wrapped up, going down to the gate. Another umbrella was coming down the street, which joined hers. Then such a number of other umbrellas went by that Emma knew Nettie would have plenty of company in the school.

When Nettie came home she reported that the attendance was small. Emma wanted to say, 'I told you so,' but the words would not come.

'We had such a very interesting lesson that it made up for all,' Nettie continued. 'I would not have missed it for anything.'

It was still raining the next morning.

'I suppose, as you'll not be going to school to-day, Emma, said Mrs. Grayson, at breakfast, 'you can finish your gingham dress.'

'What made you think I'm going to stay from school, Aunt Martha? I have to go. I should get behind in my class.'

'Oh!' Aunt Martha ejaculated. That 'Oh,' spoke volumes, and Emma heard every word those volumes contained. She sat a moment flushed and silent, then begging to be excused went upstairs. She was rapidly preparing for school when Nettie came up.

'Why don't you say what you think?' she demanded, as Nettie quietly began to make the bed.

'About what?'

'You know well enough.'

Nettie did know, but she would say nothing. She knew by Emma's troubled countenance that conscience was at work.

'Don't you know that I cannot lose my lessons to-day, Nettie?' she argued.

'How about the lesson you lost yesterday?'

Emma made no reply.

'Surely your mind is not of so much more importance than your soul that you cannot afford to lose the one lesson, and yet can afford to lose the other.'

'Don't put it in that way. You know how strict they are at school.'

'I know how strict an account we must keep of all the opportunities offered us to receive a message from the Lord, and what a serious thing it is to neglect hearing one. It is better for us to neglect the mind than the soul.'

'Do you want me to stay at home to-day?'

'No; it won't hurt you to go. But after this, dear, for the sake of your soul, let nothing keep you from Sunday-school or church which would not keep you from anything else. Give the Sunday-school at least an equal chance with your day.'

Killing The Horn Fly. The following bulletin on this subject is issued by the Purdue University Agricultural Experiment Station:— At this season of the year cattle are suffering from the persistent biting of the horn fly. This fly, which is smaller than a house fly, congregates in colonies about the base of the horns, along up the back and sides, at tender points about the flanks and the udder and on the belly. This fly sucks blood from the cattle, and so irritates them as no doubt to retard the laying on of flesh with beef cattle and the production of milk by milch cows.

Many substances have been recommended to keep away the flies. The Mississippi Experiment Station recommends two parts cotton seed oil or fish oil and one part pine tar. This station applied this mixture to 350 head at a total cost of material of $2.20.

Kerosene emulsion has always been used, spraying it over the cattle with a knapsack sprayer. The flies are killed by the emulsion if it touches them. The emulsion may be made by mixing at a rate of one pint of soft soap (or one-fourth of a pound of hard soap dissolved in boiling water) and one pint of kerosene in 15 pints of water, thoroughly whipped and churned together.

At the Indiana Experiment Station, we have tried the different substances to keep away the flies. None of these were effective over two or three days. We have tested a preparation called "Shoo Fly," which answered very well for two days. The main objection to this is its cost, 50 cents per quart, or $1.50 per gallon in three, five and ten gallon cans. One quart will do for one application to 50 animals. We have, therefore secured as satisfactory results by using a quart of fish oil in which they were mixed about 2 tablespoons of crude carbolic acid. Fish oil is 60 cents per gallon in Lafayette. These liquids are applied to the body with a flat palm brush about four inches wide. Fish oil is especially disagreeable to flies, and is probably largely used in the special preparation sold at high prices. There is one objection to using any kind of tar, in that it will make the hair sticky, which accumulates dirt, and so gives it a bad appearance.

Stockmen would do well to break up the manure in the pasture whenever possible, as the flies deposit their eggs in it, from which the young are developed. If the manure is gathered up or broken to pieces within a day or so, and if remedies to keep off the flies are applied to the cattle, the insects will disappear early in the season.—C. S. Plum, Director.

A Pleasing Theme.

Rev. Henry Helzinger Neustadt, Ont. It is a pleasure for me to write a few lines about your dyspepsia medicine—K. D. C. and if the English language were as easy to write as the German, I would like to say a good deal more. I used your medicine, and can say it is just what I wanted and needed. My sour stomach and heartburn after eating, and that gas which came from the stomach, is gone, and I am able to take cold water again, before I had to take the water hot on account of stomach trouble. I recommend K. D. C. to our people when I can, and to every one who knows what a weak stomach is.

What is CASTORIA

Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me.

H. A. ARCHER, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."
