A NIAGARA TRAGEDY

A MAN DROWNED WHILE POWER-LESS HUNDREDS LOOK ON.

He Started to Row Across the River, Lost Control of His Boat, Took Refuge in a Lodged Tree and Finally Went to His Death Attempting to Leap into a Boat.

Since sunrise they had been reviewing the wonders concentrated between Lake Erie and Lake Ontario, for who could resist the stop over privileges? Certainly not Chicagoans, who love the rush and roar of life and stupendous ways of doing things. They chose a seat where they could look into the majesty of the American cataract and tried as the June day waned to realize that the grave thunder, the desperate leap of silver and sapphire, the grinding into white smoke on the rocks below had been going on for eons. This was a tremendous mental undertaking for mortals accustomed to the evanescence of great power, and they presently abandoned the effort as vain and confined themselves to remarking the daring position of a tree washed down the river by a recent freshet and apparently rooted in the ledge of rocks over which raved and plunged the American falls. The wooden giant extended at full length, seemed to be looking defiantly over the rocky wall down into the cauldron below. That the torrent must finally conquer was evident, but to defy Niagara for even a few hours—how magnificent!

"That tree reminds me of my first visit to the falls," said a sudden and deep voice from beneath a bench a few feet away from where the two travelers were sitting. As no one else was within reasonable hearing distance, the awakened dreamers felt the remark must be for them, though the speaker looked as if he were addressing the Canadian shore or the Three Sisters. He was a stout, elderly, benevolent faced man to whom it was surely quite proper to listen. He went on hurriedly as if he felt impelled to tell a story and wished it finished, somewhat after the manner of the Ancient Mariner.

"It must have been near the end of the fifties, that first visit of mine. I had just become captain of a boat on the river and had come down here between runs. A big tree had lodged over the falls, just like that one there now. I seem to see it all over again, only things along shore are different. A little before 6 o'clock one evening a man started from the other bank at what he must have thought a safe distance from the falls. Very soon we saw that it was desperate rowing with him, but he seemed to be getting across when suddenly his little boat began to whirl downward with the current. He went with it of course, but he uttered no cry and when almost at the verge of the precipice he leaped up and caught a limb of that tree—no, not that one, but the one there 40 years ago and seated himself across the trunk. And there he sat, with the waters roaring close around him like hungry wolves.

"You should have seen the excitement. Men, women and children gathered on the bank and stood, hour after hour, shouting and praying and crying over that man, and not one of them knew him. I never did hear who he was. People coming in on the train stopped off to see what the excitement was about, especially those from the west on the Canada Southern, the one now called the Michigan Central. You know it runs several miles along the shore, giving a view of things from the rapids to the whirlpool, and so people could see from the car windows that something unusual was happening down here.

"And some of the men who stopped off clubbed together and offered $10,000 to anybody who would save that man—he a perfect stranger too! And they went up and down through the crowd, throwing up their arms as if they were insane and shouting out their offer till they were hoarse. Ten thousand dollars then seemed as much as $100,000 does now, and it was awfully tempting, but everybody was afraid, some because they didn't know anything about the rocks and undercurrents, and some because they knew too much.

"The man was but a few feet from shore—we could talk with him from the bank. He was a well built, fine looking young fellow of about 25. When men wanted a few years ago to get the cable across for the suspension bridge over there, and did not know how, some one—an American no doubt—suggested a way which they followed. They sent across a kite. To the tail of the kite they tied a cord, to the cord a rope, to the rope a cable. I've been wondering as I sat here why, in all that crowding, not one of us thought of trying to help in that way. The wind blew toward the island, just over against where the man sat, and we might have lowered a rope to him—possibly. Heaven knows we wanted to. As the hours ran on we seemed to get acquainted with that man until he appeared to be our own brother, and yet we could not get to him a mouthful of food or help him back to life. Well, he sat there looking into the face of death, speaking only when spoken to, from 6 o'clock in the evening to 4 o'clock the next afternoon—22 hours! At last something had to be done, and so a boat, secured by ropes, was drifted toward him. It seethed round and round and then seemed to stop a second right under where he sat. He gave a brave, well aimed leap, but the boat glided from under him, and with the words they say every one uses in meeting sudden, conscious death—'My God!'—he went over the falls."

Here the elderly gentleman rose abruptly and strode away as if he could not trust himself to say another word.—Chicago Tribune.

What is the difference between an educationist and an educator? On page 1887 of the International Dictionary are these two records: "Timothy Dwight, American educationist," etc. and "Charles William Eliot, American educator," etc.

THE WIDE, WIDE WORLD.

It is said the minister of marine and fisheries is not satisfied as to whether the salmon hatcheries have been an unqualified success. Personally he is inclined to think that nature can do her own work and he has seen no evidence of any great good the hatcheries have accomplished. Before erecting any new hatcheries, therefore, he will fully investigate the question.

The Haig family, which is in alliance with the Astors is said to be able to trace its history to the last King of the Picts, A. D. 800, and to claim its pedigree from Petrus Delagha of Bernesdyde, in 1150. Nevertheless, it is the age of the whisky which Mr. Haig sells that Cholly Knickerbocker wants to know about.

Negotiations are now going on between the government and the representatives of English capitalists with a view to the construction of Crow's Nest Pass railway and making it a part of the through competitive line against the Canadian Pacific from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Shingles or roofing tiles made of paper pulp are now being used in Norway and are said to be superior to any other material for roofing purposes. Insurance companies rate them as safe and desirable.

Chicago now has a real Chinese paper, the Chinese News, published by Wong Chin Foo, who, according to the Fourth Estate, "is the most noted Chinaman in the country when it comes to fame as a writer, author, and generally progressive Celestial."

The Main Question Ignored.

The professor of natural philosophy in a certain college gave the class a problem to think over during the night and answer the next day. The question was this: 'If a hole were bored through the centre of the earth, from side to side, and a ball dropped into it, what motions would the ball pass through, and how would it come to a state of rest?' The next morning a student was called up to solve the problem. 'What answer have you to give to the question?' asked the professor. 'Well, really,' replied the student. 'I have not thought of the main question, but of a preliminary one. How are you going to get that hole through?'

Would not Commit Himself.

'Jack,' said Mrs. Snaggs to her husband, 'how do you spell chrysanthemum?' 'I don't think I would put any chrysanthemums in a letter if I were you,' replied Mr. Snaggs. They will make the letter over-weight. 'Oh, if you don't know how to spell it you needn't try.' 'Who said I didn't know how to spell it?' 'Well, how do you spell it?' 'The right way.' And Mr. Snaggs resumed his perusal of the evening paper.—Pittsburg Chronicle Telegraph.

How an Irish Priest Explained a Miracle.

A man asked an Irish priest what a miracle was. He gave him a full explanation which did not satisfy the man, who said: 'Now, wont your reverence give me an example of a miracle?' 'Well,' said the priest, 'step before me and I'll see what I can do.' As the man did so he gave him a tremendous kick behind. 'Did you feel that?' he asked. 'Begorra, I did feel it, sure enough.' 'Well,' said the priest, 'it would be a miracle if you didn't.'—Boston Pilot.

A little fellow who lived near us went into a shop some weeks ago to buy a pair of gloves. The shopman started at his juvenile customer, and asked him what size he took. The youngster promptly informed him. 'Do you want kid gloves, my boy?' asked the shopman. 'Kid gloves?' ejaculated his customer. 'I'm not a kid now. I want 'grown-up' ones.'
