PAIN AND MISERY

HARCOURT, N. B., June 17th, 1896. DUNN MEDICINE CO.—

I have used your Dr. Kilburn's Blood and Nerve Pills and your Dr. Raymond's Rheumatic Liniment for rheumatism in my arms, shoulders and neck. I was so bad with rheumatism that for a long time I could not put on my coat without help, but now, thanks to your valuable medicine, all is changed.

To and one bottle of Liniment. I am an old man, seventy-seven years old, and have been troubled with rheumatism for seven years and latterly I hardly expected to get anything to help me, but your medicine has done the work for me in good shape.

NIAGARA'S NEW BRIDGE.

It Will be One of the Wonders of the World.

The new metal arch-bridge at Niagara Falls will be noteworthy in two respects. The new bridge is to be built over the old suspension structure, without interruption to the traffic on the latter. The span from end pier to end pier will be 840 feet, making it the largest span in the world.

The suspension bridge now in use which has been familiar to all visitors to the great natural wonder for forty years will be kept in place until the new arch is ready, as it would be impossible to construct false works over the Niagara gorge to sustain a structure of this class.

The span will have a rise of 160 feet from the level of the piers at the skew-backs to the center of the ribs at the crane of the arch which points is 170 feet above low water. The depth of the trusses is 26 feet, and they will be 68.7 inches apart. The bridge will carry one floor, 46 feet wide, divided longitudinally into three parts. On the middle portion, which is 22 feet 9 inches wide, will be two trolley tracks. Each side of these tracks will be a roadway for carriages 8 feet wide and outside of these, raised 6 inches from the level of the roadway will be footpaths.

The construction of this remarkable span is from plans of L. L. Buck, engineer of the new East river bridge between New York and Brooklyn, and the author of the plans by which the railroad suspension bridge at Niagara was replaced by an arch bridge.

The approaching or flanking spans will be 190 feet long on the American side and 210 feet on the Canadian side. The total metal in the new structure will be about 4,000,000 pounds. Every confidence is expressed in Mr. Buck's ability to carry out his plans. The replacing of the railroad bridge by another without an hour's interruption of business was one of the engineering feats of the decade.

Those who have not seen the great structure at Niagara which it is intended to displace will hardly realize the stupendous character of the undertaking. Imagine the task of displacing the simplest sort of bridge without interrupting traffic, and then add about 1,000 per cent to the difficulty. This will give something of an idea of what confronts engineers and builders.

In an undertaking of this nature the slightest error might be productive of infinite disaster. Every measurement must be accurate to a hair's breadth. Every portion of the great arch must perform its particular share of the great combination that will be one of the marvels of the world.

All that is done must be accomplished quickly, for in affairs of this nature time is, indeed, money. Every man who can be utilized will join the army of construction. Perhaps no work of recent years has required, or will need, more skilled labor. In fact, in bridge building it is becoming unsafe to utilize labor of any other class. The bridge, when complete, will in truth be a work of genius in point of construction, as well as point of conception.

The work of preparing the material for the great structure has been in progress for some time, as little can be accomplished in an enterprise of this nature until the preliminaries are complete. When the effort of placing the different parts of the bridge in position is begun Niagara will be one of the busiest of busy places.—Railroad Gazette.

"Roderick Random."

There are critics who find no pleasure in "Roderick Random," because they are so scandalized at the character of the hero. Critics always will be wiser than their author. The most careless reader can see that "Rory" is not intended for a "piaster saint." The severest critic can scarcely deny that he is almost all that Smollett intended to represent. A brave, haughty, fairly accomplished lad, with an inflexible but very limited code of honor, and a temper not unnaturally soured by the consciousness of having been denied every ordinary chance in life, the wonder is, when we reflect on what he had to undergo, not that "Rory" sank so low as he undoubtedly did at times, but that he did not make utter shipwreck of his life; with his temptations and opportunities, that he never did anything to bring his neck into danger—even that alone is no small merit. He is tampered with his ungenerous behavior to Strap; but that could not but arise from the false position, intolerable to any man of Mr. Random's pride into which the two had fallen.

"Rory" is always generous to those who he feels are beneath him, as his conduct to "Rourke O'Regan" proves; but he could not endure patronage, however delicate, from an inferior. His blunt confessions, so constantly used against him, are themselves a sign of penitence. To be appreciated they should be compared with the hypocritical glossings of a really selfish man, which Thackeray has admirably reproduced in "Barry of London." The Chevalier Barry we may be sure, never pleads guilty to an ungenerous act.—Gentlemen's Magazine.

Bees and Spraying.

It has been often argued that when orchards are sprayed with arsenical poisons while the trees are in bloom a great many bees are killed. The bees are not only useful as honey gatherers, but they are very helpful in fertilizing the flowers. Some experiments show conclusively that bees may be killed in large numbers by spraying while the flowers are open, and since this practice is never necessary at that time for the destruction of injurious insects it should be avoided. The trees should be sprayed just before flowering, and as soon as the blossoms have fallen, but never while they are in bloom.
