BUCTOUCHE NOTES. MAY 17.—The town is very quiet, the farmers are busily engaged in sowing and planting.

The lobster fisheries are in active operation.

Clam (Quahaug) and oyster raking are extensively carried on. The clams are sold at 80c per barrel, and a man can dig from two to four barrels in a day.

They are taken by boat to Point du Chene, and sold there to American speculators. At this rate of consumption, it will be strange if our waters are not soon as bare of clams as they are of oysters.

The present low price of clams forcibly reminds us of a similarity of circumstances in regard to oysters some years ago. At that time, they could be brought here at ridiculously low prices, and it was not until the waters were almost depleted, that alarm was taken, and parliamentary interference was called for.

Then, when too late, did we find that oysters had a vast commercial value.

THOSE LICENSES.

Editor of The Review.

May we ask as one among many if the statement in your last issue, that 'all applications for licenses to the Kent County Commissioners were granted?' It must be a mistake or some licenses were granted illegally. I am one who happened to be present at said meeting at Buctouche, and I know positively that some licenses were not granted, and that one license was granted in the absence of those who received such serious objections thereto, that no Board of Commissioners could with Justice or reason grant said license. When the meeting closed the Commissioners with all laid objections on the minutes had not given judgment in this particular case, or a request for an ex-hearing would have been entered. We would like the Commissioners to say whether all applications were granted so as to give opportunity to have some of them rescinded.

Yours truly, RATEPAYER.
