ordering applies? It is a common remark that women, as a class, are unbusimesslike in their fanncial transactions, awi lack of experience is generally urged as an excuse for this fact. But is may be submitted that any woman who has the ordering of a home may get the experience in the fundamental rules of business-exactness, system, alertness: and equity-by giving intelligent personal attention one hour every morning, or even twice a week, to the purchase of family supplies.

As a matter of economy, in view of the advance in prices all along the line, and to give women training in the basic principles of business, in which all agree that they are generally deficient, the proposal that they superintend personally the important branch of housekeeping expenditure that applies to the butcher's, grocer's. and vegetable vender's bills is well worth considering, not in a spirit of parsimony, but with the intelligent purpose of getting full measure of the best there is in the market for the money expended. Woman's right in this field is undisputed. The expediency of her personal activity therein is conceded. Let women take possession of their inheritance as a duty, learn the difference between the judicious and wasteful investment of money: between fretful haggling for bargains and a proper discernment of values and prices, and they will have taken a long step toward a reasonable understanding of everyday business transactions, and households in general will be better and more economically fed than now .- Portland Oregonian.

A Woman's Empalsiveness.

If a thoughtful woman were asked, "What is the greatest curse of your sex ?" she might well answer, "Impulse." It is responsible for almost all the mistakes made by the good hearted among us. May it not safely be said that a few minutes' thought before speech or action would prevent most fatal blunders? Many of us are in positive bondage, quickness to feel, to show our feelings, to retort or to respond. If we are hurt, we must immediately "give ourselves away," as the phrase runs, if not by bitter speech at least by look and manner, get reflection frequently brings the keenest regret for lost dignity, the betrayed secret. Many a one has wrecked her own happiness for the want of the patient stoicism which would have led her to stand aside for awhile watching events until they brought with them her opportunity. Even when we are happy it is not always well to let the bright stream bear us away rudderless. The impulsive manifestation and stirred up a lot of wreckage. He gave

DEATH WHILE ON DUTY.

SAILORS LASHED TO RIGGING AT THE BOT-TOM OF THE SEA.

At the bottom of the ocean off Montauk point the wrecks of two ships have been found lying side by side, with their dead crews lashed to the rigging.

These ships were the schooners Howard H. Hanscom and James R. Pace. Their loss more than a year ago was a complete mystery. No one knew even where to search for them. It was only through an accident that their whereabouts was at last discovered.

"Silas Jones, a fisherman of Orient, N. Y., while fishing off Montauk point had his line caught in something deep down the ungency signal and were hauled up to the susface.

REVIEW RICHIBUCTO. N B. FEBRUARY 8, 1900

It was minutes before they could tell of the horror they had seen. They could hardly yet realize the meaning of it. It seemed to them at first that some abroc. ious villion must have bound the crews of two ships to the rigging and sunk them all to the bottom of the sea.

When the divers and their companions began to think over the tragedy, its meaning soon became clearer to them, and they reasoned out what had happened.

They learned that the Manscom and the Pace had been lost in the great storm of November 1898, and they concluded that these were the ships.

They must both have been running beboth been caught by it when they were outside the eastern end of the sound: They turned or were driven back and were trying to find chelter inside of Montauk. point.

They must both have been before the gale with bare poles utterly at the mercy of the wind and waves. The crew as is usual in case of such storms, lashed themselves to the rigging and the masts and whatever was convenient, so that they might not be washed overboard. A man on the deck of a low lying, heavily loaded schooner would otherwise be without defense against the mighty waves that sweep the ship from end to end.

The crews of the Pace and the Hanscom were both in the same wretched plight, half drowned and half beaten to death by his legs .- Boston Globe. the waves, hoping, but helpless.

which nearly cost Peters his life. On the day the storm began they started for their camp at Ripogenue lake, Me., but lost their way in the storm and built a shakedown of boughs. During the night they were awakened by a noise in the under brush and rousing up saw a big bull moose staring at them from a distance of not over 30° feet. The moose was between them and their guns, which they had sheltered in a hollow stump. As they sprang up the moose daoned at them. They endeavored to climb into the nearest tree, but the long antlers of the moose struck Peters before he could get out of reach. The prongs caught in his clothing and cut daep into his legs. He fell to the ground and luckily landed beside a fallen spruce, under which he rolled, where the moose could not reach him

Digon attempted to get at his rifle, but was unable to do so, and Peters was too badly injured to climb a tree.

They had to remain where they were antil morning, with the moose on guard over them. In the morning a passing party of woodsmen drove the moose away.

Peters was carried to the nearest camp and his wounds dressed in the best manner possible. It will be many months however before he will regain the nos of notice of this to the authorities, and the government set divers to work.

Their task was a difficult one of this season of the year on account of the roughness of the sea, says the New York World. The perils and hardships of a diver are great enough without the addition of a stormy sea that tosses the boats up and down and threatens to choke the air pipes at every moment. The two divers who labored off Montauk in storm and cold were destined to meet a sight that shook their stout hearts more than all the perils they ever went through.

Down at the bottom of the ocean they found the wrecks of two small ships, with their masts and spars locked in a last embrace. After giving the necessary signals with the communicating cord they were moved to the level of the decks. Cautiously they stepped forward after the manner of divers and peered out of their great glass eyes. Each saw a skeleton lashed to the shrouds nearest to him. Each peered farther into the green gloom, and each saw more skeletons, skeleton after skeleton without end.

There were skeletons lashed to the shrouds, skeletons lashed to the stays, skeletons lashed to the masts, skeletons lashed to the bulwarks, skeletons".lashed to the bowsprit, skeletons lashed to the wheel. On both ships it was the same.

These skeletons were ginning praying, gesticulating, clasping their hands in prayer, raising their hands in frenzy.

Imagine the awfulness of standing in the green twilight of the depths of the sea surrounded by a swarm of bound sketetons striving to be free! As soon as the divers could collect their
