MONCTON AND BUCTOUCHE

Don't neglect that persistent hacking cough till you find yourself in the clutch of Consumption. It's an easy matter to stop it now by taking

DR. WOOD'S NORWAY PINE SYRUP.

This pleasant remedy heals and soothes the lungs and bronchial tubes, and cures lingering and chronic coughs when other remedies fail.

Mr. W. P. Cann, writing from Morpeth, Ont., says: "I honestly believe I would have died of consumption only for Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. I have used it for years and consider it has no equal for severe colds and throat troubles."

FEMININE DIPLOMACY.

"How do ycu get on with your new neighbors?"

"Very nicely," answered Mrs. Blykins. "We pursued our usual programme, and as soon as they moved in sent over and asked to borrow their wash tubs, flatirons, | ing. gas stove and baby grand piano."

"But you have all such things yourself."

"Of course. What I wanted to do was to head them off."

WHAT THEY WOULD GIVE?

It seems a waste of time to warn people against neglecting coughs and colds, but what would victims of consumptions and pneumonia give if their disease were only its beginning, if it were only a cough or cold. Deadly lung diseases begin with colds that could certainly be cured by Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, the great prescription which not merely relieves but thoroughly cures coughs and cold together.

CELESTIAL VOTERS.

HOW THEY ELECTED THE WRONG MAN MAYOR OF BALLARAT.

A Political Scheme Which Brought Disaster to Its Perpetrators and Furnished Lots of Fun For the Winner and His Friends.

In the early fifties, when what is now the Australian colony of Victoria was the Mecca for many of the gold hunters of the world. "a tent town" called Ballarat, now a beautiful and thriving city, grew up like a mushroom in the night. Ballarat men were prosperous, and the wonderful placer mines yielded fortune after fortune till at last the increasing importance of the settlement demanded some sort of organization in the government of its local affairs.

For a year a "law and order corps," a body of men formed for the same purposes and very similar in every way to the old California vigilance committee, had exercised the only authority that the place had ever known. But the miners wanted something more advanced, and it was finally decided to elect a mayor for six months, "just to see how it went," and to give the man chosen for the position power to decide on the number of municipal officers he wanted to help him in his administration. Then they would nominate and elect enough people to fill the places.

The story of the way the first mayor of Ballarat carried his election forms unique incident in the history of the vote by ballot and, as it has never appeared in print, may be worth the tell-

There were two candidates for the place, Edward Warburton, a Scotch mining engineer, and Evan Tomlinson, called by the irreverent "Smooth Tommy." Both men were wealthy, and each was popular in the community, but Tomlinson had the advantage of being a born politician. There were about 3,200 white men in the settlement, and, in addition to these, Ballarat had its Chinatown up on one of the hills, with a population of 800. The spirit of democracy was very strong among the cosmopolitan crowd of miners.

Tomlinson had figured out that the vote for mayor would probably be very closely divided between himself and his opponent, and as three-fourths of the Chinese were working on claims owned by himself and his brother he made up his mind that the only way to make his election certain was to get the consent of the "free and independent" to a proposition to allow the Celestials to cast their ballots with the whites.

Warburton and his supporters, realizing that such a concession would mean a crushing defeat, fought hard against the idea, but "Smooth Tommy" had the ear of the members of the law and order corps, who were running the preliminaries, and Warburton's protests were overruled.

Jimmy Barrett, a roustabout speculator, was installed as clerk of election. The ballot boxes were five old fashioned leather portmanteaus, with slits in the sides, and the ballots were small printed slips of this character:

Tomhinson 0 Warburton 0

Election day came. The Chinese were well in hand and had been thoroughly drilled into what they had to do. Tomlinson had explained carefully through their interpreters that every man, in order to vote the right way, would have to mark a cross inside the square following the top name on the card. The interpreters were very particular in impressing the "top name" idea on their men, and they understood the lesson thoroughly. Each voter was to approach the table on which the portmanteaus sat in full view of the crowd and on being handed his ballot by Barrett was to deposit it after making his cross.

Some of Warburton's long headed friends had found out all about the instructions to the Chinese, and they got at Mr. Barrett and bought that gentleman, body and boots, to help them carry out a little plot that they had devised for the benefit of their candidate. It was very simple. All that the clerk had to along to vote. It was a slim chance that the conspirators were depending on-simply the belief that the Chinese would carry out their literal instructions and insert their crosses on what they believed was the top square of the card. That the square appeared on the left hand side of the name would probably strike the Chinese voters as being perfectly natural, according to their own method of penmanship. Barrett fulfilled his part of the contract in a very thorough manner.

The Tomlinson adherents, who had watched nearly 800 Chinamen march up to the polls and seemingly carry out their promises, thought that the election was as good as settled, and many of them were making merry over the prospect in the tent saloons along the Ballarat tenderloin long before the polls were closed. Their joy was short lived. Warburton was elected by a majority of nearly 700 votes-saved by his opponent's own laborers. Old miners say that after the result was declared and when Tomlinson found out all about the "double cross," or, rather, the single cross, that had been worked on him he walked up the hill to Chinatown and, standing among the shacks of his almond eyed vassals, read the riot act to them with fiery eloquence. Even when he called them "dunder headed, blithering Mongolian idiots" they
