

CANADIAN LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., U. S. A., June 7, 1901.—Lord Pauncefote, the British Ambassador, sailed for home on the St. Louis, of the American Line on June 5th. He expects to be gone until October. "I look forward to this trip with interest," he said "as I shall meet King Edward for the first time since he became king. I shall go direct to London, and after that my plans are uncertain." Although he goes on a vacation, the trip will afford Lord Pauncefote an opportunity for conferences with Lord Salisbury and Lord Lansdowne concerning pending questions, chief of which are those in connection with the Isthmian Canal. Lord Lansdowne has made known that he will not take up the subject for consideration until Lord Pauncefote arrives at London, when the papers at hand and such additional personal information as the Ambassador may have, will be gone over. The stay in London will not be prolonged beyond July. Although in excellent health, the Ambassador will probably go to the continent during the late summer months to obtain the advantages of the German waters. A further conference with the ministers at London will occur in September or October, just before the Ambassador returns to Washington.

Lord Pauncefote's departure leaves Mr. Gerard A. Lowther as British charge d'affaires for the next five months. Mr. Lowther and the embassy staff will remain in Washington until June 25th, after which date they will occupy the embassy quarters at Newport for the rest of the summer. The British charge has had extended experience in the diplomatic service, having spent much time in China just before coming to Washington. While in Cuba he traveled extensively, so that he had personal knowledge of the conditions there, which will be of service in connection with the pending negotiations on Chinese affairs. The Lowthers are among those taking a prominent part in British public affairs, his brother being one of the foremost parliamentary leaders, while several of his near relatives have been conspicuous in the war in South Africa.

Col. B. D. Bently, of Chicago, one of the largest vessel owners on the Great Lakes, is in this city on a visit. He is enthusiastic over Chicago's claims to be a seaport, holding that the route by way of Montreal and the St. Lawrence now in regular use entitles her to be considered such. Speaking of lake navigation, he said, "The season which is now well under way promises to be the most prosperous in the history of lake navigation. Many new vessels have been launched, but there is no indication that the supply will yet equal the demand when the rush begins. The days of sailing vessels on the lakes are about over. There used to be hundreds of schooners, carrying ores and coal and other raw materials, which were not hurried for transportation, but the building of the monster whalebacks and other steam vessels of large tonnage has made possible the carrying of even raw materials by steam cheaper than they can be carried in sailing vessels, and the steamships are rapidly gobbling up the business. By carrying coal up the lakes and bringin-ore down the vessels need go light neither way. Another important factor in cheap transportation is the modern methods of loading vessels. At all the principal ports from which coal is shipped there are machines which pick up bodily a railroad car and dump the coal from it into the hold of the vessel. For the loading of schooners no such provision is made, and the coal has to be shoveled in the vessel and shoveled out again."

Alfred H. Brooks, of the Geological Survey, who is one of the best known government explorers, is preparing to start to southeastern Alaska, where he will make a thorough investigation of the mining resources of that part of the country. His trip this summer will be confined to the coast, and he will cruise along shore in a sail boat. He also will visit the islands along the coast, as little is known of their resources, many of them being almost wholly unexplored. Mr. Brooks has gone out with a number of the most important parties sent by the government to explore the untried ice fields of that new country, and was one of the first to discover the new gold fields. Parties under him broke much of the way in the Copper River country, over which Explorer Peters and F. C. Schrader, the geologist, are now passing, within the arctic circle. It is believed much precious metal lies in convenient places along the coast, and that coal will be found in sufficient quantities to supply the local demand. The government now has four important parties in Alaska, and though hitherto little information could be given either as to the area or topography of the interior of the country, aside from the old beaten ways, the work being done will in another year leave Alaska a most familiar country to students of geography. "The distillers of Scotch whiskies have suffered some setbacks in the last twelve months," said Mr. Adam Dawson, proprietor of a large business in Edinburgh, while a guest in this city recently. "That comes from the enormous output of the distilleries during the two previous years, most of these distilleries were bought up by capitalists, who thought they would return a large profit, but they went into business on such a large scale that the market was glutted and prices have gone way down. A very large portion of the Scotch whiskies brought to this country is cheap stuff, and would not be tolerated by a Scotchman who knows the good article." Mr. Dawson came across the ocean with his wife and son, chiefly for the latter's health, and has been making a short tour of the United States and Canada.

Fished For Its Dinner. "Looking over my neighbor's fence one day," says a lover of animals, "I was surprised to see on his doorstep these queer companions: A beautiful white sea gull and my neighbor's pet cat sitting quietly together. "Becoming interested, I jumped the fence and asked Jones about his feathered pet. He told me that some boys had shot the gull a few days before and broken its wing, and as they were passing his house he noticed the poor, suffering thing and bought it. He bandaged the broken wing, and the gull, seeming to understand his kind intentions, became quite tame and nestled its pretty head against his hand. "Jones entertained me by showing how the gull usually took his meals. Bringing a plate of oysters and a fork, he called 'Goosey, goosey, goosey' and the bird came running to him. Then he held out an oyster on the fork and the gull seized it quickly with its yellow bill and ate it as demurely as if oysters had been served to it in this way all of its days. "The oddest thing occurred one day when my neighbor gave the gull some small pieces of meat for dinner. He placed the meat on the ground near the gull, but the gull, spying a pan of water near by, took the meat piece by piece and, walking over, dropped it into the water. Then, true to its nature, it began fishing for its dinner."

Last Cargo of Slaves. Captain Foster was the commander of the slave ship Clotilda that brought the last cargo of slaves to the United States. The trip was made only after many thrilling scenes requiring weeks of skillful maneuvering and dangerous exploits. Just before the north and south engaged in war Captain Foster built the Clotilda and announced that he would make a trip to the gulf of Guinea despite the fact that United States war vessels had burned and sunk the ships of many who tried the voyage. He was warned repeatedly of the dangers attached to such an undertaking, but he equipped his ship and sailed away. He reached the African coast after going out of his course many times and remained along the coast for a month. He succeeded in getting 100 negroes on board before he was detected by the watchful vessels of the United States. He was pursued, but easily outdistanced his pursuers, and two months later arrived in Mobile bay with his human cargo. A steambot met the slaveship during the night, and the negroes were transferred in order to avoid the custom house officials. Captain Foster set his vessel on fire and passed through Mobile without being detected. The government authorities hunted for him for months, but he eluded them until the close of the war, when he retired from the sea.

Tippling the Butcher. Did you ever buy your own steaks and get the worst in the shop nearly every time? An old friend has had that misfortune, and he is always willing to pay two or three cents more a pound than any other customer. Having listened calmly to his tale of woe, I inquired if he had acquired the practice of tipping the butcher. Tippling the butcher? No! He thought it was a sufficient tip to offer the two or three cents more a pound. "That offer," I tried to explain, "goes to the proprietor direct, or his block man thinks you are trying to make a thief of him by inducing him to hold out for himself the extra price. It will never work. "Just say to your cutter: 'See here, old chap, I've been dissatisfied with my steaks for some time. Come out and take a drink, and tell me how to select good meat.' He's too busy. Then slip a dime into his hand and say, 'Have a glass of beer when you get out,' or a quarter and say, 'Have a smile with me when you have time.' Repeat this performance and presently your steaks are the delight of home. In the busiest private market in New York it is the rule to tip the butchers. You can get nothing fit to eat without it."

Not an Educated Dog. In the "Floresta Espanola" of Melchior de Santa Cruz the author has an anecdote of Cardinal Pedro Gonzalez. That prelate noticed that one of the priests in his retinue, a Biscayan, carried a short sword under his cloak. The cardinal reproved him and told him that it was wrong for a cleric to carry arms. The Biscayan replied that he carried the weapon to defend himself if he were attacked by a dog. The cardinal said that in case he saw a dog running at him he should begin to recite from the gospel of St. John. The priest acknowledged that this was a good way, but held to the dagger. "because there are some dogs who do not understand Latin."

Two Ways of Writing. Mrs. Bibbs—I declare! You men can't write a letter unless you have a regular desk and office chair and big blotting pad and I don't know what all. Mr. Bibbs—Yes, and a woman may have a $200 writing desk, with everything to match, and yet she'll sit down on a stool and write on an old book.

Made Sure of the Pie. A young girl who carried her dinner was observed to eat her pie first. When asked why, she replied, "Well, if there's anything left it won't be the pie, will it now?"
