RICHIBUCTO, N. B. JAN. 31, 1901

HIS IMPERIAL MAJESTY.

It will take the British people some little time to get used to the idea that once more a King reigns over them. So long had Queen Victoria guided the imperial destinies, that but a very few people now living remember when a King sat on the throne of Great Britain. But the sorrow of the British people over the Queen's death is untinged with any fear of what the future will bring forth to the Empire. His Majesty King Edward VII has been so favourably known to his subjects, that there is but one feeling at his ascending the throne, and that is a feeling of confidence in his maintaining the dignity of his high estate and preserving intact the rights and liberties of his subjects. And this confidence has been strengthened by the proclamation issued by the King on assuming the new position. In it he assures the empire of his determination to rule according to the constitution, and to follow in the footsteps of his dead mother in the great imperial work.

As Prince of Wales our new King has been before the people for very many years and has been a general favourite in the trying position of assisting his aged mother in the laborious functions of sovereignty. He has had to maintain a sovereign's position without a revenue sufficient for the purpose; he has had to show the same unselfish devotion to imperial duties as though he had been in reality King, without getting cred for the work performed. And he has filled his trying position with credit to himself and honor to the nation. The British people therefore greet their new King with every confidence in his ability to carry on the great work of government.

In this work King Edward will be ably seconded by his gracious lady Queen Alexandra, who after Queen Victoria has for many years been the most popular woman in Great Britain. It will be the nation's wish that every possible honor should be paid to one who has on every occasion exhibited such womanly tact and goodness of heart. Queen Alexandra at the time of her marriage to the Prince of Wales ceased to be the Danish princess and became the British woman in all her sympathies and ambitions. Her popularity is as great as her husband's, and the entire nation unites in the hope that King Edward VII and his gracious lady the Queen may be long spared to rule over them.

How wonderfully indignant and excited the St. John Sun is over the swamp vote in Kings county. We saw none of this indignation over the greater hardship of the disenfranchisement and stuffing of the Kent county lists by the Tories.

THE AUTOCRAT OF KENT.

To say that Mr George V. McInerney, ex-M. P. for Kent has been bitter since his retirement to private life is to express the truth in its mildest form. That gentleman had persuaded himself that he held this County in the hollow of his hand, and that his dictum must be the will of the people. To his surprise the electorate at the recent elections snowed him under so badly that he has not yet recovered his customary suavity. Nor has he seemingly learnt the lesson that the elections would have taught most intelligent men, namely that Kent was a good deal bigger than any one individual in the community.

Last year, acting as Secretary of the Municipality, Mr. McInerney diverted from this paper the bulk of the County printing, and sent it out of the County altogether rather than allow it to be done in THE REVIEW office. With that action we would find no fault if the Secretary of the County paid the bills for the Municipality, but as these are still paid by the people of Kent we failed to see any good reason why this money should not be spent in Kent so long as there was a printing office capable of doing the work and prepared to do it at reasonable prices. Especially when it is considered that in the interest of the people THE REVIEW has from year to year published in full the proceedings of the Municipal Council.

Last week the manager of this paper asked the Secretary of the municipality for the County printing, and stated that even if some of it were being sent to an office outside the County that at least one half of the work should be given to THE REVIEW, as the only printing office in Kent. Mr. McInerney's terse reply was that THE REVIEW was getting enough. That this action on Mr. McInerney's part is the result of political animus against this paper for its opposition for its candidature is the only reasonable deduction we can draw. We therefore notify Mr. McInerney that THE REVIEW speaks for the Liberal sentiment of Kent, and its voice cannot be stifled by any patronage from him or any other servant of the people.

What do the people of Kent think of such petty action on the part of that political autocrat, the ex-member of this county.

THE NATION'S LOSS.

The death of our beloved Queen has filled the Empire with a gloom which is only relieved by the national pride in the well spent life which has left behind it so fair a record of intelligent progress and development. Queen Victoria had reached the age of 82 and had reigned 64 years, or a longer period than any other British sovereign. Under her wise and constitutional government the empire had passed unscathed through many a fiery ordeal, and had broadened the limits of its imperial bounds in a manner which could never have been anticipated when as a girl of 18 she took in her frail hands the national sceptre. During that time Britain had commercial distress at home and many wars to weaken the national fabric, but in spite of all, its people have become the masters of the world's commerce and their country the greatest empire upon which the sun has ever shone. Never in that time has foreign foe placed his foot on the soil of Great Britain.

The long reign of our dead Queen will therefore pass down into history as the brightest period of Britain's national experience, and the Victorian era will correspond to the Augustan age of Rome's triumphant progress. In it Britain developed those imperial ambitions which have made the Union Jack a familiar sight on every sea, and under which India, Canada and Australia have become the Greater Britains beyond the seas. The contempt of the Briton at home for his brother in the colonies has changed into a true feeling of brotherhood between the men of the blood whether their residence be in the home land itself, under the maple leaf of Canada or the sunny skies of the antipodes. All have had the same devotion to the flag, all have paid the same homage to the great Queen mother of the imperial family.

So while the people of the Empire sorrow for their great dead, they feel the honest pride that comes to those who have lost one worthy of remembrance. The widow of Windsor has been too much a living personality to her subjects to be lightly forgotten and the chivalry and patriotism which she has ever evoked will remain as the greatest monument of a worthy Queen. The very lack of commercial panic or national excitement over so serious an event is the best epitaph which could be written of Victoria the good. As a woman, wife and mother she evoked the heartfelt admiration not only of her own people but of the world at large, and it is one of the comforts of this period of national mourning that her death has called out such marked expressions of sympathy from the people of the civilized world, and particularly from the American people who have evidenced in no stinted manner their feeling of kinship on this occasion.

SIR WILFRID'S POLICY.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier's speech at Toronto a few weeks ago was the first which he has delivered since the general elections. Neither the occasion nor public expectation would have warranted his going deeply or at length into political questions; yet he did not fail to say a few timely and significant words upon a topic of general interest—the future course of the Liberal party. He said:—

"We have received a new mandate from the people. We are now just entering into the execution of that mandate. What shall it be? It shall be the continuation of the policy which we adopted four years ago, a policy of conciliation, a policy of justice for all, a policy of equal rights for every British subject upon this part of the globe, a policy of progress, a policy of development. We shall continue our preference to Great Britain (cheers) as we have, and on no other terms. We shall endeavor to increase our trade amongst other nations, and I hope that when again the bugle is sounded, when we have to call again to the people of Canada, we shall be able to present to their attention a brighter record, a brighter record even, if I may say it modestly, than the record which we have presented to the people, and which received their sanction and approbation on the 7th of November (great cheering)."

These are noble and comprehensive words. They are not in the spirit of bluster and boast which a man in the blush of triumph and feeling a lighter sense of responsibility, might have indulged. They are statesmanlike, and show that the Premier has a deep appreciation of what may be regarded as the essential elements of the Liberal policy—conciliation, equal rights, preference for the motherland, progress and development. Action along such lines really represents a large undertaking; but we believe the Canadian people have faith in both the courage and capacity of the government.

It is not probable that the Premier had anything special in view when referring to conciliation and equal rights. These are sound principles for general application rather than exceptional. Yet the declaration at Toronto of these features of the Liberal policy was not inopportune, having regard to the campaign which is just now being waged with sinister and mischievous purpose, by opponents of the government. Conciliation, justice and equal rights were put first as forming the foundation of government by the Liberal party, and only while that stratum remains will the superstructure be safe.

Progress and development comprehend all that is wrapped up in the fiscal and general policy of the Administration. It was not necessary to say that these involved the continued reduction of taxation as opportunity offered, as well as the opening up of new and wider avenues of commerce. These are fundamental Liberal objects and require no elaboration. They ensure to the country activity in a definite direction, respecting which everybody is concerned, and upon which our future prosperity and expansion will necessarily turn.

The Tories are very much worked up in St. John because some country people beat them out on adding names to the Kings county list. It is impossible in ten years of stuffing lists every time to get even with the past record in this line of the Tories.

People who live in glass houses should not throw stones, is an old saying. So our St. John Tory contemporary would do well if in the near future some of its own close friends are not standing among broken glass.

The St. John Telegraph took the Sun to task for misrepresentation on the La Verite matter and it has not replied. Have we not repeatedly caught our Tory contemporary at this business and it always sneaked away in silence.

Long live the King.

We lost one beloved Queen but we still possess a gracious Queen.

Our Yankee cousins showed their respect for Queen Victoria in every city but one and that was Mayor Van Wyck, of New York. However, nothing better could be expected of Tammany.

The Municipal Council met and the bills were cut.

How quiet George V. McInerney has been of late. Nothing as yet of those three seats in Ontario.

Hon. George E. Foster finds difficulty in persuading any person to resign and make room for him.

We have had Sir Charles Tupper's valedictory. It promised much for the past, nothing of the present and less for the future.

The Union Advocate deals Commodore Stewart some genial blows.

The World's editor was posing as a critic of dramatic critics. His experience is largely derived from dramatic scenes on yachting trips. And there are such.

The only properly edited newspaper in New Brunswick, according to Commodore Stewart, is the Chatham World. It would be interesting to know the name of the editor?

PUZZLE—WHERE HAD HUBBY BEEN?

"What's the matter?" cried Mrs. Chip from the second story window at 3 a. m. "Can't you open the door?"

"No, my dear," replied the gay Mr. Chip; "I haven't even a pair of jacks."—Philadelphia North American.

CARD.

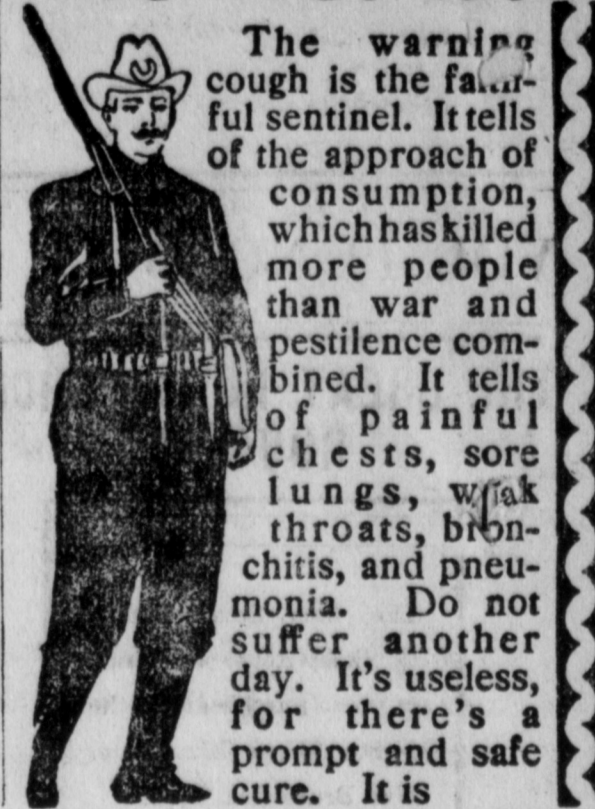

TO THE FREE AND INDEPENDENT ELECTORS OF THE COUNTY OF KENT:—

Gentlemen:—As the time is now fixed for the Bye-election in our County, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of the late lamented Peter H. Leger, I have decided to offer myself as a candidate for your suffrages—my position will be that of an independent candidate, and I shall accord to the government an independent support and give them a generous assistance in perfecting and carrying through such legislation as I believe will prove beneficial to the varied and general interests of all classes of the community. I feel I need not assure you that my best energies and ability will be unselfishly devoted to the advancement of the farming, lumbering, milling and fishing industries, which unquestionably do not enjoy at present the protection which their several importance demands. I seek no office of any kind, nor would I accept one if offered. Should I succeed in securing a sufficient number of your votes to make me the successful candidate I will certainly regard it as the proudest moment of my existence, and I will endeavor so to discharge the important duty that will devolve upon me in such a manner as you will never have the slightest reason to regret the day you cast your ballot in favor of the subscriber. I will visit as many sections of the county as time will permit. Victory is certain and therefore do not act so indiscreetly as to lose your vote on the 18th day of February, 1901, by casting it for any other candidate.

Your obedient servant,
PHILIP WOODS.

ON GUARD

The warning cough is the faithful sentinel. It tells of the approach of consumption, which has killed more people than war and pestilence combined. It tells of painful chests, sore lungs, weak throats, bronchitis, and pneumonia. Do not suffer another day. It's useless, for there's a prompt and safe cure. It is which cures fresh colds and coughs in a single night and masters chronic coughs and bronchitis in a short time. Consumption is surely and certainly prevented, and cured, too, if taken in time.

A 25c. bottle for a fresh cold; 50c. size for older colds; $1 size for chronic coughs and consumption.

"I always keep a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral on hand. Then every time I get cold I take a little of it and I am better at once."
