New Color in the Cheeks

Richness in the Blood

And Health, Vigor and Strength in the Whole System When Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is Used.

Pallens of the gums, lips and inside of eyelids, nervousness, weakness, indigestion, headache and despondency are the symptoms common to chlorosis and anemia.

These symptoms indicate that the blood is thin and watery, and does not contain sufficient nourishment—symptoms that disappear when Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is used to build up the body and fill the shriveled arteries with rich, red, life-sustaining blood.

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is a special formula devised especially for all diseases arising from an exhausted condition of the blood and nerves, and has proved signally successful as a cure for anemia and chlorosis.

In fact it cannot fail to cure these ailments, because it goes directly to form new red corpuscles in the blood, and so nourishes and restores the system to health and vigor.

It is of incalculable worth to women suffering from the weaknesses and irregularities peculiar to their sex, and is evidenced by the grateful testimonies published from time to time in the daily press.

EXCHANGED VALISES.

Why the Rightful Owner of One Never Called For It.

The story was told by a quiet, black bearded gentleman who had registered from Pittsburg and who happened to be one of a group of yarn spinners in the corridor of a hotel.

"I am in the foundry business at present," he said, "but in my younger years I imagined I was cut out for a doctor and took a course at the old Ohio Medical college in Cincinnati. It was the custom at that time and may be yet for the advanced students to do a good deal of individual dissecting work at their rooms, and for that purpose a regular division was made of certain of the cadavers at the college. One student, for instance, would get an arm, another a foot and another some other section, which they would carry away and study at their leisure."

"One evening—I will never forget it if I live to be a thousand—I secured the forearm of an unusually fine subject, a muscular negro, and, putting it in a small valise, started for my quarters in the eastern suburbs of the city. The mule car I took was unusually crowded, and I put my valise on the floor. When I reached my rooms and took a second look at it, I was shocked to see that I had picked up somebody else's luggage by mistake. I tried to lose my specimen, but what troubled me a hundred times more was the thought of the fright that it would probably occasion some innocent person, maybe a woman, and on reflection I concluded to report the matter at once to the police."

"Accordingly I got on the cars again and went directly to headquarters, where I was fortunate enough to catch the chief just going out. He heard my story in his private office and agreed with me that the discovery of my ghastly package would be apt to fill some household with horror and consternation. 'We will have somebody rushing in here before morning with a clew to a mysterious murder,' he said; 'and, by the way, suppose that we open the valise you have with you. It may furnish us with the address of the owner.' It was locked, but he soon found a key that fitted, and when he looked inside he gave a prolonged whistle. 'Your valise will never be reported, doctor,' he said dryly. 'The one I had picked up contained a kit of burglars' tools.'"

AMBIDEXTERITY.

Should the Use of Both Hands Be Encouraged?

The question, Should ambidexterity be encouraged? is answered in the negative by a writer in The American Journal of Insanity and upon the ground that, while coarse movements may be performed nearly as well by one half of the body as by the other, accurate and expert movements require a higher organization of one half of the brain than the other. Hence the more expert hand should be consistently still more and more specialized. Making the ordinarily quiescent half of the brain assume control tends, it is said, to impairment of mental processes as well as inferiority of physiologic speed and dexterity.

All of which we deny, both fact and theory being untrue. The writer has doubtless been misled by observation of the function of speech, which is single and in execution requires the control of a single center. We have but one voice, but we have two hands, which in many cases at different instants may be put in action with the same dexterity. Many surgeons can operate equally well with either hand, and we have seen men who could write as well with the one hand as with the other. The critic of ambidexterity may reply that this is impossible with synchronous movements, forgetting that in the musician, and especially in the pianist and organist, there is the most marvelous expertness of both hands executing most complicated and entirely different functions and at the same instant.

The arguments against ambidexterity appear not only inconclusive, but are squarely contradicted by facts. Surely also they are against a desirable freedom of the mind. Without the musician's ambidexterity life would be deprived of much charm. We should encourage "divided attention" and that large power of the mind over the body shown in the synchronous control of multifarious activities.

Comparatively Easy.

A benevolent old lady stopped on a street corner to wait for her car and was attracted by the bright face of a young Italian who was grinding his organ near by.

She found a 10 cent piece in her purse and dropped it into his hand, well repaid by the brilliant smile which accompanied his "Tanka."

"It must be real hard to turn that crank as steady as you do and keep such good time," she said cordially.

"Not so difficult," said the Italian, showing his white teeth in another smile. "You see, madam, I no have the monka. To turn the crank so steady, keeps the time and watch the monka, madam, that take the artiest—the true artiest. It sees the monka that demands the genius, madam!"

A Royal Cake.

The Princess Elizabeth, daughter of Charles I, was a domestic sort of princess and was noted for the fine cake she made. One of her old recipes is headed, "To make a cake the way of the royal princess, the Lady Elizabeth," and reads: "Take a half pint of flour, half a pint of rosewater, a pint of ale yeast, a pint of cream, boil it, one and a half pounds butter, six eggs, leave out the white; four pounds currants, one-quarter pound sugar, one nutmeg, a little salt. Work it very well and let it stand half an hour by the fire and then work again, and then make it up and let it stand one and a half hours in the oven. Let not the oven be too hot."
