THE GULF STREAM.

Harvey M. Watts, in an article in the June number of Scribner's Magazine, ridicules the idea that the Gulf Stream in any way influences the climate of Western Europe. He says:

"Modern meteorology knows that the Gulf Stream as an ocean current has no more effect on the climate of Western Europe than the weather vane has on the winds that turn it. The Gulf Stream, in fact, might be engulfed in Colon or dammed at Key West, without anyone from the Scillys to the Hebrides being any the wiser. The essential facts are that the Gulf Stream as an ocean current ceases to exist, that is, to differ in set and temperature from the rest of the ocean east of the longitude of Cape Race, Newfoundland. It cannot, therefore, convey, does not convey, warm water to the shores of Western Europe, there to modify the climate and give the British Isles the breezes of the 'unvexed Bermudas,' and Sweden and Norway the warmth of the Carolinas. But, above all, climatic causation is not a function of ocean currents but of aerial currents, and the mild oceanic climate of Western Europe is due to the distribution by the permanent aerial circulation in the whole Atlantic basin of the moderating, mitigating effects of the ocean as a whole."

For many years it was accepted as a fact that the mild climate of Western Europe compared with that of Eastern America in the same latitude was due to the warmer waters of the Gulf Stream, which it was claimed could be traced as far north as the northern coast of Norway. Now it is generally acknowledged that this difference in temperature is due to some extent at least to other causes, and it is claimed by many that the Gulf Stream as a distinct current ceases in the middle of the North Atlantic. The great majority of people however, still give credit to this ocean current for the genial climate of the British Isles and other parts of Europe. The geographies used in our public schools still teach us that the difference in temperature between the waters of the Gulf Stream and the adjoining waters, as far north as Iceland, is seventeen degrees, and that these warm waters bathing the coast of western Europe have a very marked influence on the climate there. It is well known that driftwood and vegetation from the West Indies are quite frequently cast ashore on the Hebrides Islands and even as far north as Spitzbergen. By some this is accounted for by the general flow of the surface waters from the equator to the poles, but the explanation generally accepted is that they are borne there by the waters of the Gulf Stream and that while the velocity of this current and its temperature are greatly reduced in its passage north, it can still be traced as a distinct current until it is lost in the cold waters of the Arctic ocean. It is no doubt true as stated by Mr. Watts that aerial currents have much to do with the climate of a country, but it is equally true that the temperature of certain localities from local conditions has much to do with aerial currents. The effect of the Gulf Stream upon the temperature of places affected by it is nowhere more strikingly observed than in Iceland, which, although situated on the confines of the Arctic ocean, enjoys a climate no more severe than that of the northern part of Scotland. The people of eastern Canada who have experienced the damp and chilling easterly winds caused by ice floes and icebergs brought down by the polar current between us and the Gulf Stream, have good reason to know the effect of an ocean current on the climate of a country.

SENSATIONAL NEWS.

For some unaccountable reason the public taste of the present day caters after sensational news and so earnest have the people become in their desire for something sensational, that newspapers, in order to keep up with the public requirement, are compelled to publish every detail of the most horrible tragedies and disgusting crimes. Let a murder be committed, and readers are not satisfied unless the facts are related in the most blood-curdling language with every detail enlarged upon and drawn out. In the reports of divorce trials the more revolting the evidence, the more eagerly is it sought after and read by the public. In cities where there is generally a lively rivalry among the newspapers as to which will be first in the publication of news, this fact is generally recognized and reporters are always on the alert for any choice bit of scandal or sensational news. It is published with flaring headlines and very often accompanied by pictorial illustrations drawn from the reporter's imagination. It is to be regretted that there should be this demand by the reading public for news of this class. It certainly does not indicate a healthy public taste. The gratification of this appetite for sensationalism destroys the finer sentiments of the mind, more particularly among young men and women. As an evidence of this we need only refer to the disgraceful tactics resorted to by some of the citizens of Montreal to gain admission to the execution of a murderer hanged there last week. No one except a person of the most depraved taste would take any pleasure in witnessing a human being launched into eternity. Yet it is reported that on this occasion every expedient was adopted by the public to gain admission to the execution and that seats were sold for as high as ten dollars each. The prison authorities in the larger cities of the United States complain that the attention bestowed on condemned criminals by the women in these cities has become almost a nuisance. The more brutal and diabolical the crime, the more bouquets and flowers for the criminal. Czolgotz, who assassinated the late President McKinley, came in for a large measure of this emotional attention from the ladies of the place where he was confined. The prison yard was besieged by ladies eager to see him, he was daily deluged with flowers and the most costly presents were sent him. It has been commented upon and thought scandalous that the women of Italy should have shown admiration and sympathy for a notorious bandit and murderer arrested there some time ago, but unless the craze for the sensational is checked, we may expect to see our criminals receive the same attention and devotion from the women of this country.

BREEDING LOBSTERS.

The ever growing scarcity of lobsters in the sea, and the ever growing demand for the fish—is it a fish?—upon the land is helping to create a movement to establish lobster hatcheries and breeding ponds for the lobsters. It is said that successful experiments have been carried out under the direction and control of the United States fish commission in the way of raising lobsters. By enclosing otherwise useless coves along the shores of say Massachusetts, Maine, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, lobsters may be profitably as the naturally bred, and this valuable edible marine animal saved from the absolute destruction which now threatens it. Probably the artificially propagated lobster could not be sold as cheaply bred lobster was a few years ago. But within the lifetime of many persons the lobster has increased in price five hundred per cent., if not more, and none to-day can fix a limit at which it may not be sold if wealth continues to increase and the lobster continues to decrease in numbers.—Globe.

BOSTON, MASS.

The weather is very warm in Boston now, all the public gardens are in full bloom.

Miss Carrie Reid intends paying Rexton a visit this summer.

We are glad to hear that Mr. James Conway, Jr., received word from his brother, Martin, in S. A. C., that he is recovering slowly. It is to be hoped Mart will see Rexton again.

I suppose the Rexton laborers are once again at their post at the saw mills.

Mr. Al. Girvan was seen by a lady from Rexton not long ago. He is looking fine.

Memorial Day was greatly observed here, all the soldiers graves being decorated with beautiful flowers.

BABIES WITH WORMS.

A Grateful Mother Tells How Her Little Boy Was Cured.

Mrs. A. Saave, Rowanton, Que., is another happy mother who thanks Baby's Own Tablets for the health of her boy. The little fellow became the prey of worms—that curse of childhood. His rosy cheeks lost their color; his little legs and arms became skinny; his eyes lost their sparkle and he became sickly and peevish. His sleep was restless and feverish, and his food seemed to do him no good. His anxious mother almost despaired of seeing him back again to good health. However, she heard of Baby's Own Tablets, and gave them to her child, and now she says:—"The Tablets made a wonderful change in my little boy. All signs of worms have disappeared, and he is now in the best of health. I can honestly say that Baby's Own Tablets have no equal as a cure for worms."

Baby's Own Tablets are a certain cure for all the minor ailments of little ones, such as constipation, colic, sour stomach, indigestion, diarrhoea, simple fever and the irritation accompanying the cutting of teeth. Guaranteed to contain none of the poisonous opiates found in the so-called "soothing" medicines. They are for children of all ages, and dissolved in water can be given with absolute safety to a new-born babe. Sold by druggists at 25 cents a box, or sent postpaid on receipt of price, by addressing the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.
