were appointed, and, instead of at once abolishing the Council, had given it what they considered a further life of four years. Hon. O. J. LeBlanc had, however, fulfilled his promise and had voted for immediate abolition. There were other causes, and they were easily found. The finances of the province were in a most disastrous condition. We have an income of some $650,000, but we have been spending yearly a sum varying from $50,000 to $100,000 in excess of this. If this continues, any one can easily foretell the result. We will and must end in bankruptcy, just as any individual who spends more than he earns must do. Mr. Blair sees that he must at once resort to direct taxation, and he wishes to get the control of affairs firmly again in his grasp before he introduces this measure. He has, however, done so to a degree. The thin end of the wedge has already been entered, and the whole wedge will be driven home as soon as the elections are over. Should Mr. Blair succeed in the tax on telegraph, telephone and insurance companies, he had taken the first steps in this direction. True, the taxes are not levied directly on people, but the companies are really only the collectors of the tax, as they get it out of the pockets of the people in their business, and hand it over to the government. There is a notice in the bank in a neighboring town showing that the man who gets a note discounted pays a tax of ten cents on each note, be it large or small. He has also brought in a measure to tax the people to build the roads and bridges. This has not been put in force yet, but will be made effective as soon as Mr. Blair sees fit to make it so. The thousands of dollars squandered by the government in purchasing support have been sadly missed from the treasury, and you, the tax payers of this county, will have to foot up the bills and furnish the money with which Blair wins his political victories. I will now give attention to some of the charges and canvasses that are made against me. Mr. Leger, a man who was selected by Mr. Lablouis as being the most easily and cheaply purchased of any of the Conservatives of this county, and who accepted terms which had been refused by Mr. Goguen, and would have sneered at by any honorable, high-minded man, and who owed his election, not to his popularity, but to the money used in his behalf by Blair, has gone over this county, making charges that he knows are not true. You all know, I suppose, that many men think it no harm to tell a political lie. They would not lie about a man's private life, but think it no harm to destroy his political and public career; otherwise I cannot conceive how Mr. Leger can reconcile these false stories with his sense of honor and right. Well, Mr. Leger has charged that I caused a number of the fishery officers to be dismissed. Mr. Leger knows quite well that I have not the patronage of the county. He knows that this lies with Senator Poirier. I could not dismiss these men if I would, and I certainly did not do so, but Mr. Leger is mean enough to work on the natural feeling of irritation felt by these men and their friends in order to get up a feeling against me. I will read you a letter from Hon. C. H. Tupper saying that the dismissals were caused by changes in the working of the department, and not by anything done or said by him or anyone else. You will see now how reliable is the word of Auguste Leger, M. P. P. Another canvass is that I am a non-resident. Ha! ha! By what rule does Mr. Leger gauge the intelligence of the people of this county? It must be by his own, and it shows a true measure of his capacity for being stuffed. He is a large man, as you see, and can stand, and did stand, some stuffing last year, and he thinks you as easily fooled by him as he was by Blair. Do the people who come to meet me on business think me a non-resident? I fancy that I receive my full share of public patronage. Do the people who employ me find their business neglected? Do the assessment books, on which Mr. Leger showed his fitness for public business, show me a non-resident? Does one of you for a moment believe such trash? No, I am not a non-resident! I took my son, by the doctor's directions, out of the reach of the sea air, and naturally took him to his mother home, Fredericton, to be nursed back to health and strength. You are also told that I slandered the people of the county in saying that Blair bought the election of A. Leger, M. P. P. It is well known that in every community there is a purchasable element and Kent is no worse in this respect than other places. I did say, and you all know whether I did not state a matter of public notoriety that A. G. Blair, the highest law officer of the crown in this province, stood in this place and publicly, in the sight of all, buy, in the most shameless manner, the votes that were for sale. You all know this to be true. Many here witnessed with
