

MISCELLANEOUS.

LORD HILL AT TALAVERA.—Hill was moving up to reinforce Colonel Donkin, and was in the act of giving some orders to the colonel of the 44th regt. when he was fired at from this summit; and not doubting the shots proceeded from some British stragglers, who mistook the direction of their fire, he rode smartly up, accompanied by his Brigade Major, Fordyce to stop them. These two were instantly surrounded by the enemy; Fordyce was killed on the spot, and the head of a French grenadier was already on the bridle of Hill's charger; but the general spurred his horse hard, broke away, and galloped off. Directing the wounded beast downwards, he met a part of the 29th; and turning, led them up with miraculous courage to the charge. The old 29th did not disappoint him, they won back the summit at the point of the bayonet. But scarcely had the general placed them in position by the side of Colonel Donkin's brigade, ere a heavy mass of French battalions again advanced; and a violent attack, of which, the first was but a prelude, and was delivered so close, that the combatants discerned each other's formation within a few paces. The British having poured in their deadly volley, rushed on with their bayonets, broke the dark columns and drove it down.

THE THREE BROTHERS. It is a remarkable circumstance in the history of France that the line of CABET became extinct in the person of Charles IV. the last of three brothers who sat successively on the throne. The race of VALOIS succeeded, and in the progress of a few centuries died out in the same manner after the successive reigns, Francis II. Charles IX. and Henry III. To this dynasty the house of BOURBON was the next in order, and after the death of Louis XVI. and Louis XVIII. and the abdication of the third brother Charles X. it seems extremely probable that the period of their royalty is arrived.

GOOD NATURE. Louis XVI. in a gay party at Versailles, thought he perceived an opportunity of relating a factious story. He commenced, but ended the tale abruptly and inipidly. One of the company soon afterwards leaving the room, the King said, "I am sure you must all have observed how very uninteresting my anecdote was. I did not recollect till I began that the turn of the narrative reflected very severely on the immediate ancestor of the Prince of Armagnac, who had just quitted us; and on this, as on every other occasion, I think it far better, to spoil a good story, than distress a worthy man."

LITERARY FOOTMEN. These consist of persons, without a single grain of knowledge, taste, or feeling, put on the livery of learning, mimic us phrases by rote, and are retained in its service by diet of quackery and assurance alone. As they have none of the essence, they have all the externals of men of gravity and wisdom. They wear green spectacles, walk with a peculiar strut, thrust themselves into the acquaintance of persons they hear talked of, get introduced into the clubs, are seen reading books they do not understand at the museum and public libraries, dine (if they can) with lords or officers of the guards, abuse any party as low to show what fine gentlemen they are, and the next week join the same party to raise their own credit; and gain a little consequence give themselves out as wits, critics, and philosophers (and as they have never done anything no man can contradict them,) and have a great knack of turning editors, and not paying their contributors.

THE AGE.—The present time may well be compared to an army in full march. All have decamped and are on the road. Some however, cry, Halt! and point bounds where they shall stop. But though a part halts for a moment to see what there may be, the bulk still goes on; and, anon, those who stop at the bounds find themselves deserted, and their words of command vanished away; for there is no one who understands them any more—and miserable is their plight. Awhile they may beguile themselves in the company of stragglers; at last, however they will find themselves left alone, as the Age has passed by, and they are living in the world, altogether foreign to them. So it has happened in manufactures, in trade, and also in politics.

ECLIPSE OF THE MOON. A letter from Algiers, Sept. 4, says—"The day of our arrival was very remarkable: for some minutes during an eclipse of the moon, all the inhabitants of Algiers were on the Terraces, striking upon kettles, and uttering loud cries to deliver the moon from the power of the dragon."

The royal visit to the Theatre decided the question "Which holds most money?" Both were crammed. At Drury Lane the receipts were 776l. At Covent Garden 684l.
