

MISCELLANEOUS.

MARRIAGE.—"Young women," said Montesquieu, "are sufficiently ready to marry." How should they not be? The pleasures, the avowed sentiments of love, are only permitted in this condition. It is thus only that they are placed at the head a little empire. "It is the young men," he adds, "who need to be encouraged." But why? Do the motives which lead men to marry want force? It is only by marriage that a man can obtain the favours of the woman who, in his eyes, is worth all others. It is only by marriage he can live freely and publicly with an honest and respectable woman, and who will live only for him. There is nothing more delightful than the hope of a family, where proofs of the tenderest affection may be given and received; where power blended with kindness may be exercised; where confidence and security are found; where the consolations of old age may be treasured up; where we may behold ourselves replaced by otherselves; where we may say, "I shall not entirely die." A man wants an associate, a confidant, a counsellor, a steward, a mistress, a nurse, a companion for all seasons. All these may be found united in a wife. What substitute can be provided.—Bentham.

POLITENESS.—It is an evenness of soul, which excludes at the same time both too much insensibility and too much earnestness; it supposes a quickness in discerning what may suit the different characters of men; it is a sweet condescension by which we adapt ourselves to each man's taste, not to flatter his passions but to avoid provoking them; in a word, it is a forgetting of ourselves in order to seek what is agreeable to others, but in so delicate a manner, as to let them scarce perceive that we are so employed; it knows how to contradict with respect, and to please without adulation, and is equally remote from an insipid complaisance and a low familiarity.

A GOOD TOAST.—It was a very happy sentiment with which the young Duke of Buccleugh complimented the table, at which he sat as host, at Drumlanrig, where a rural entertainment was given last week:—"My tenantry,—the best friends I have."

The late commander-in-chief at Algiers, Marshal Bourmont, with his two sons, Adolphe and Charles, arrived at Portsmouth, on Monday, by the Messenger steam-vessel, from Gibraltar, and, having received passports, proceeded to London on Tuesday.

Quid Pro Quo.—Judge R. when president of the court of common pleas to the county of Philadelphia, was one day asked by Mr. B. a Member of the bar, whether the court would set the next day. "Sit, Mr. B.," the judge replied, "not set; hen's set." Soon after in a case in which the same lawyer was concerned, Judge R. observed, that an action would not lay in that case. "Lie, your honor," retorted Mr. B. "not lay; hens lay."

A Reason for Red.—Soldiers are clothed in red, that in the heat of the action the sight of their blood may not terrify either the wounded or their companions.

Among the prisoners sentenced at the Kirkdale Sessions are two youths, named Porter and Beer!
