CHURCH AND STATE.—The constitutional charter of France, has wisely separated religion, as an establishment, from the state. This is an example which other nations must, sooner or later, adopt. It is necessary for the interests of religion itself, which is injured and degraded when allied with political machinery. No religion ought to be encouraged which cannot stand of itself; if it require the prop of human laws; it cannot be a true religion. It must be nothing more than a pretext for patronage, a secular institution created by men for their own worldly purposes, and a continued insult to the Deity. The religion which has power to attract and fix men's minds will exercise that power without the assistance of legislators, and will be infinitely better cultivated if left to its course. The poorer the minister of the gospel are the better; the better they will instruct the rich, the better attend to the spiritual wants of their needy fellow-creatures. This is a subject upon which England has much to learn, and will not have a little to do. But the day for this business has not yet arrived, though we can perceive the faint glimmering of its dawn.—Monthly Review.

ANECDOTE OF ACTORS.—I said Liston appeared to me to have more comichumour than any one in my time though he was not properly an actor. Northcote asked if he was not low-spirited, and told the story (I suspect an old one) of his consulting a physician on the state of his health, who recommended him to go and see Liston. I said he was grave and prosing, but did not know there was any thing the matter with him, though I had seen him walking along the street the other day with a face as fixed as if he had a lock-jaw, a book in his hand, looking neither to the right nor the left, and very much like his own Lord Duberly. I did not see why he and Mathews should both of them be so stiff, except from their having the play-er's melancholy, arising from their not seeing six hundred faces on the board grin before them at all times, as well as when they are acting. He was, however, exceedingly unaffected, and remarkably candid in judging of other actors. He always spoke in the highest terms of Munden, whom I considered as overdoing his parts. Northcote said, "Munden was excellent, but an artificial actor. You should have seen Weston," he continued: "it was impossible, from looking at him for any one to say that he was acting. You would suppose they had gone out and found the actual character they wanted, and brought him upon the stage without his knowing it. Even when they interrupted him with peals of laughter and applause, he looked about him as if he was not at all conscious of having any thing to do with it, and then went on as before. In SCROO, DR. LAST, and other parts of that kind he was perfection itself. Garrick would never attempt Abel Druggar after him. There was something peculiar in his face; for I knew an old schoolfellow of his, who told me he used to produce the same effect when a boy, and when the master asked what was the matter, his companions would make answer, 'Weston looked at me, sir!' Yet he came out in tragedy, as indeed they all did!"—Conversations of Northcote and Hazlitt.

The Bath Directory boasts of a lawyer named 'Physic,' a doctor called 'Law,' a parson named 'Rant,' and an actor called 'Church.'
