

were given to storm, and the church, being carried by assault, all who had not fallen in the skirmish were taken prisoners.

From this time the fusillade entirely ceased, with the exception of a few shots interchanged about 9 o'clock, near the Halle, between the troops and some detached groups of the insurgents. The national forces were masters of all the posts formerly occupied by the rioters, who were either killed, prisoners, or seeking their safety by individual flight. As, however, the possibility of some of them rallying at night was contemplated, every precaution was taken; all the streets in which any disturbances had taken place were occupied by troops, and no one allowed to pass without being searched by the guards, to ascertain that they had no concealed arms. The lancers of Nemours and some other cavalry regiments remained in the Champs Elysees, with their bivouac assumed the picturesque appearance of a regular camp. Towards 11 o'clock, however, as nothing appeared to justify the apprehensions entertained, the majority of the troops were allowed to retire to their quarters, detachments only being kept in bivouac near the points of most importance.

No estimate has yet been attempted to be formed of the number of killed and wounded, though it must be very considerable, and we regret to hear that several officers of the National Guard are among them.

The number of persons arrested is stated to exceed 1000, including those taken in the streets and those arrested at home. Among the latter are M Sarrut, and another of the editors of the Tribune. It is also said that a warrant has been issued against M. Cerrel, the Editor in chief of the National.

During the day the gardens of the Palais Royal were shut, and nearly all the shops were closed; but in the evening a great number of them were partially opened. The theatres were not open in consequence of many of the actors being engaged by their duties as National Guards.

Up to the hour of going to press, no intelligence of any fresh disturbance had reached us.

(From the afternoon Edition of Galignani's Messenger.)

Paris is tranquil. We have visited this morning the Rue St. Martin, and the Cloiture St. Mery, and we find that it was not in the church itself that the insurgents fixed their head-quarters, after being driven from the grand barricade in the Marche des Innocens, but in the house No. 30, Rue St. Martin, which is opposite the Rue Aubry le Boucher.

A number of the Deputies now in Paris have held several meetings at the residence of M Laffitte, and a Deputation consisting of Messrs. Laffitte, Odillon Barrot, and Arago, was yesterday appointed to wait on the King, and confer with him on the state of the country. We have not heard anything as to the nature or result of the interview.

On the morning of Thursday, an ordinance appeared in the Moniteur, which declared Paris to be in a state of Siege. Ordinances have also been issued suppressing the School of Alfort, the Artillery of the National Guard, and the Polytechnic school, with a view to their future regulation.

Three of the Parisian Journals—the Quotidienne, the Tribune, and the Couriers de l'Europe—have been suppressed, and a number of other Journals were stopped at the Post Office on Wednesday and Thursday. It is said that the Editor in chief of the Tribune, and one of the editors of the Quotidienne, have been arrested; and some accounts add, Viscount Chateaubriand. Chateaubriand has rendered himself an object of most legitimate suspicion, in acting as the agent of the Duchess de Berri's pretended charity.

JUNE 11.

We have not as yet received any accounts from Paris, subsequent to those of Thursday night. The work of blood had then ceased, and the work of justice or policy was to begin. The insurrection had been put down by the National Guard and the regular troops, at a great expense of human life, and every thing depended on the use which the Government was about to make of its costly triumph.

The King and the Government have it now in their power, by the conciliatory moderation of their measures and by their timely concession to reasonable opinion, to render their recent success over the republicans subservient to regulated freedom—or to lay the foundation of another revolution, by the display of military despotism, and the exercise of judicial vengeance.
