THE GLEANER.

GEORGE THE FOURTH'S FIRST LOVE.

The King was certainly among the number of those who are susceptible of a deep passion, if everything be true that I have heard. All the world has heard that he was passionately devoted to the beautiful sister of the then Duke of Richmond. That was before his marriage; and I believe it is certain, that he not only wished, but sincerely meditated to have married her. So much is matter of notoriety. But other circumstances of the case have been sometimes reported, which imply great distraction of mind, and a truly profound possession of his heart by that early passion; which, in a prince whose feelings are liable so much to the dispersing and dissipating power of endless interruption from new objects and fresh claims on the attention, coupled also with the fact that he never, but in this one case, professed any thing amounting to extravagant or frantic attachment, do seem to argue that the King was truly and passionately in love with Lady Sarah Lenox. He had a demon upon him, and by some accounts, was under a real possession. If so, what a lively expression of the mixed condition of fortunes, and not less of another truth equally affecting, viz. the dread conflicts with the will—the mighty agitations which silent and in darkness are convulsing many a heart, where to the external eye, all is tranquil,—that this King, at the very threshold of his public career, at the very moment when he was binding about his brows the golden circle of sovereignty,—when Europe watched him with interest, and the Kings of the earth with envy, no one of the vulgar titles to happiness being wanting—youth, health, a throne the most splendid on this planet, general popularity amongst a nation of freemen, and the hope which belongs to powers as yet almost untried,—that, even under these most flattering auspices, he should be called upon to make a sacrifice the most bitter of all to which human nature is liable! He made it, and he might have then said to his people—'For you, and to my public duties, I have made a sacrifice, which none of you would have made for me.' In years long ago, I have heard a woman of rank recurring to the circumstances of Lady Sarah's first appearance at Court after the King's marriage. It was either a presentation, or it occurred at a ball and, if I recollect rightly, after that lady's own marriage with Sir Charles Bunbury. Many eyes were upon both parties at that moment,—female eyes especially,—and the speaker did not disguise the excessive interest with which she herself observed them. The lady was not agitated, but the King was. He seemed anxious, sensibly trembled, changed colour, and at last shivered, as Lady S. B. drew near. But, to quote the one single eloquent sentiment which I remembered after a lapse of thirty years, in Monk Lewis's Romantic Tales—'In this world all things pass away; blessed be Heaven and the bitter pangs by which sometimes it is pleased to recall its wonders, even our passions pass away.' And thus it happened that this storm also was laid asleep and forgotten, together with so many of its kind, that have been, and that shall be again, so long as man is man, and woman woman. Meantime in justification of a passion so profound, one would be glad to think highly of the lady who inspired it; and, therefore, I heartily hope that the insults offered to her memory, in the scandalous memoirs of the Duc de Lazzar, are mere calumnies, and records rather of his presumptuous wishes than of any actual successes.—Tail's Magazine.

INSENSIBILITY OF THE BRAIN.

The brain is insensible—that part of the brain, which if disturbed or diseased, takes away consciousness, is as insensible as the leather of our shoe! That the brain may be touched, or a portion of it cut off, without interrupting the patient in the sentence that he is uttering, is a surprising circumstance! From this fact physiologists formerly inferred, that the different parts of the nervous system have totally distinct endowments, and that there are nerves, as I have elsewhere shown, insensible to touch and incapable of giving pain, though exquisitely alive to their proper office, we have no just reason to conclude that the brain should be sensible, or exhibit the property of a nerve of the skin. Reason on it as we may, the fact is so;—the
