

AGRICULTURAL.

Hints for making a Manure.—As it is not in the power of small farmers and gardeners to keep a sufficient number of animals to make a large quantity of manure, (usually prepared in the farm yard,) to form a source of wealth so much neglected in situations really requiring these means, and difficult to obtain them, we will now give some directions for the best substitute for this purpose. First then, dig a pit in a convenient part of the farm or garden premises down to the clay, if there be any, or a kind of tank or cistern near the house would be still better, and put a layer of fine broken earth on the bottom, on which throw for some little time, say a week, all the suds, dirty water, and all other liquids from the house and farm, that can be collected—the whole to be properly mixed together with a shovel, the operator standing on the brink of the pit or tank; and afterwards a thin layer of earth, road scrapings or sods to prevent evaporation. In another week, or as often as possible, add another layer of finely broken earth, and other liquids from all quarters, till your cistern is full, and ready to be cleansed out, to give room for another making. When the material is thrown out of the pit, it will always be necessary and proper to cover it over entirely with weeds or some kind of refuse, as straw, &c., but the more vegetable matter the better. It will be found, if this process be persevered in, that a greater quantity of this kind of manure to produce fine crops, than is usually made from the farm yard, will not be necessary, and the good effects will remain in the soil, and appear on the future crops. Buts should be made in different parts of the surface of the heap, the liquid being always immediately covered over. Lime in successive layers would greatly add to the richness and value of the above compost, and leaves from the woods might be added to it occasionally with great advantage. Now learned essayists, classical theorists, and scientific expositors of modern terms may laugh at this simple plan of agricultural enrichment, but here is matter on which we may exercise nearly all our senses—we can see it, touch it, and at any stage of the process can readily hear it.—But before concluding, we must observe that different manures are adapted to different soils and different plants, and a long continuance of the same manure to the same soil is often injurious.—We must here also remark, that we have known farmers to draw manure at a dear rate, from towns, who were allowing much liquid manure, for want of a trifling arrangement in the stables, viz., wooden gatters, to 'waste its sweetness in the desert air.'—Western Farmer.

In the garden, constant care must be taken to keep all crops clear of weeds, to thin out such plants as have come up too thick, and to supply deficiencies where there have been failures. It is not too late to plant corn, beets, carrots, kidney beans, and cucumbers for main crops. Some plants will be injured by grubs if vigilance is not exercised—they must be examined in the morning, and if found eaten off, the grub must be searched for and destroyed. Examine young cucumber plants, and pinch to death all the striped bugs that can be found, until the plants get beyond their reach. The colytedons or seed leaves are more necessary to be preserved than the other leaves, as the plant is sure to die if they are destroyed early.—Sticking of peas may be dispensed with by substituting the following contrivance:—stretch on sticks at suitable distances along the rows, strings of bark or bass matting; the plants will cling to these and thus be held erect.
