

CHATHAM HOG REEVES ATTEND.—What have you to say in answer to the charge brought against you by our correspondent? We have none to offer on your behalf. Our correspondent is no caveller, but has good cause to complain of the depredations of these long faced gentry.

Mr. Pierce.—As Editors of Newspapers are supposed to be both able and willing to answer all the interrogations which may be addressed to them by their subscribers, perhaps you will have the kindness to inform the public through the medium of your Journal, why it is that those useful functionaries called Hogreeves, are this season so remiss in discharging their duties; for the lower part of Chatham appears to be altogether abandoned to the amusement and pastime of the Gentlemen of the long snout. Go where you may, from St. Andrew's Church up to Mr Cunard's shipyard, and back to the Wellington Road, and in every direction, you meet with hale and robust gentlemen in confederated bands, playing most diligently their avocations, excavating pits—casting up trenches—trying the nature of the subsoil—removing stones—in short busying themselves in every sort of occupation which can give variety to the surface of the soil, by subjecting it to every possible mutation.

Dickens tells us in his "American Notes," that the pigs of New York are Republican gentlemen of the first order—enjoying a degree of liberty unknown to their brethren of Europe. Nevertheless, he informs us, that in their struggles with their enemies, for their republican rights and privileges, they often lose their ears and tails;—but the pigs of Chatham roam about neither minus their ears nor tails, free, proud, and independent—acting as their own "rui generis" sense of honor may chance to dictate, and enjoying such a large amount of exemption from molestation from Hogreeves and all other enemies, as would truly astonish their less favored Yankee friends.

It is somewhat surprising that the road commissioners do not see the propriety of protecting the roads from unnecessary damage, and perhaps a hint from the Gleaner on this subject might have a good effect; for it must be confessed that it is somewhat hard to be called on yearly to mend roads in whose destruction these restless quadrupeds are permitted to exercise and recreate themselves.

I am, &c.
